In California, Coastal Trails finally gains approval...

By PETER BLAIS

RANCHO PALOS VERDES, Calif. — The California Coastal Commission's recent approval of an oceanfront golf course here represents a successful conclusion to a four-year battle waged by the local Zuckerman family and Orange County developer Barry Hon.

Local permits are still needed for the Ocean Trails Course at Palos Verdes. And an environmental group — the Coastal Conservation Coalition — has enlisted the support of such heavyweights as the Sierra Club and has a lawsuit pending to stop the project.

But the Zuckermans and Hon — who recruited some big-name support of their own in the persons of state Assembly Speaker Willie Brown and acting Senate President David Roberti — overcame their biggest hurdle April 14.

That's the day the Coastal Commission gave its blessing to the 260-acre project. In so doing, it overruled a staff recommendation that would have required tripling the amount of land set aside as a public park while reducing the course to just a dozen holes.

"We saw limiting the course to 12 holes as a way of effectively killing the project," Peggy Zuckerman said. "Conditioning something to death is a well-known method of stopping a project in California."

As is, developers agreed to many conditions. Approximately 30 acres of coastal sage scrub areas around the course and another 34 acres along oceanside cliffs have been set aside for public access and as a nesting area for the California gnatcatcher, a threatened species.

"We chose to treat the gnatcatcher as if it were endangered [rather than an endangered species that requires less protection]."

...while Ahmanson Ranch project remains in bureaucratic limbo

By PETER BLAIS

VENTURA, Calif. — A land deal and lawsuit must still be settled before the long-awaited Ahmanson Ranch golf project becomes a reality in the hills abutting Santa Monica Mountains National Recreation Area.

The proposed Ahmanson Ranch community includes two golf courses, 3,600 homes, 400,000 square feet of offices and shops, and 300-room hotel. Developer Ahmanson Land Co., a subsidiary of Home Savings of America, first proposed the project more than six years ago.

A complicated arrangement was near completion earlier this year that would have placed 10,000 acres of private property under federal and state control in exchange for county approval of the multi-million-dollar development.

The land was to be acquired through developer donations as well as funds provided by the Santa Monica Mountains Conservancy and federal government. Approxi-

NEWS IN BRIEF

HANA, Hawaii — A majority of area residents polled oppose Keola Hana Maui Inc.'s proposed 200-acre, 18-hole golf course project. Of the 792 people who cast ballots, 388 — or 53.4 percent — said "nay." The issue of the golf course will come before Maui's County Council's Planning Committee soon.

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — TRIMS Software International has announced the TRIMS $1,000 Scholarship Award, bestowed annually on a student studying turfgrass management in a school or college with TRIMS Grounds Management Software as part of its curriculum. Students may receive information on the TRIMS Software Scholarship by contacting their turfgrass adviser or TRIMS at 1-800-733-9710.

JANESVILLE, Wis. — Rock County officials will soon be accepting proposals for the development of an 18-hole golf course on 200 acres of county-owned land just south of the southern Wisconsin airport. The land was specifically set aside for recreational purposes under the Rock County Airport Master Plan.

WILLOUGHBY, Ohio — Lake Metroparks recently spent $2.7 million to buy the 18-hole Pine Ridge Golf Course, located in Wickliffe. Apparently, the public approves. Since the course went municipal in May, golfers in the immediate area have flooded the phone lines of Lake Metroparks Executive Director David Noble. Greens fees and course hours are the main concerns.

DIXON, Ky. — Golf developer Mike Walker has completed the first nine holes of his Wildwood Golf Course complex just off Kentucky 132 between Dixon and Sebree. Walker, who broke ground in July of 1992, also has plans to build an adjacent 18-hole championship course by next summer.
