NEWS IN BRIEF

WILMINGTON, Ill. — Golfers who land in the traps at the new 18-hole Cinder Ridge Golf Course north of here will find their balls resting on land in the traps at the new 18-hole course, replaced the traditional sand traps with coal cinders. Assistant pro Brian Tulk said cinders are actually softer than sand and play similarly, but do not cause as much wear on golf clubs. • • •

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Two long-closed holes at the 27-hole Tartan Park course at 3M Co's Lake Elmo recreational facility have reopened. The two holes were flooded repeatedly in the mid-1970s and were closed. Tartan Park has three nines: Red, White and Blue. • • •

ANAHEIM, Calif. — The city has swapped 143 gas-operated golf cars at its two city-owned golf courses for electric cars. Gas-powered cars will be outlawed in California by 1997. The battery-powered cars go about three rounds between charges. Anaheim's Hills and H. G. "Dad" Miller courses host about 200,000 rounds of golf annually. • • •

SARDIS, Miss. — North Mississippi's Sardis Reservoir is widely known for its excellent bass fishing. Its reputation may soon expand to include fine golf. Construction is under-way at the new $3.4 million 27-hole course, 9-hole par-3 course, driving range at John Kyle State Park. Golf course construction and park renovations are part of a $29 million state package to improve state parks. • • •

VAIL, Colo. — Construction is underway on Cordillera's Valley Club Golf Course, a par-72 course scheduled to open in spring 1997. Designed by Tom Fazio, the course is located in the Cordillera Valley Club community.

White House putting green restored to former glory

BY MARK LESLIE

ASHINGTON, D.C. — The Eisenhower putting green, Ike built it, some fellow named Haldeman had it bulldozed when perhaps he needed to express some control during the uncontrollable Watergate months, and two decades later another man in another party has had it restored.

The legacy of the Eisenhower green, built on White House grounds when Ike was president in the 1950s, was renewed last September at a dinner celebrating the President's Cup. It was then, during a discussion with U.S. Golf Association (USGA) President Reg Murphy and course architect Robert Trent Jones Jr., that President Bill Clinton agreed that this centennial of the USGA would be the perfect time to restore Ike's practice green.

"It turned out that while Nixon was away for a weekend, H.R. Haldeman had it removed." — Robert Trent Jones II

It became a project of the people. When temperatures warmed this spring Jones got the job done. Shaper Doug Ingram of Jones' Greenscape construction firm spent a week in late April and early May contouring the tiny 1,500-square-foot surface and installing the irrigation. Indianapolis irrigation consultant Tony Altum of A.S. Altum Irrigation Design designed the irrigation system. Toro Irrigation donated the system and moving equipment. Summit-Hall and Patton sod farms gave the turf. Lof's Seed Co.'s Dr. Rich Harley consulted on the project, and Pat Aide gave the flag and cups.

USGA Green Section Mid-Atlantic Region Director Stanley Zontek and Glenn Smickle, superintendent at nearby Robert Trent Jones Golf Course in Manassas, Va., have provided the agronomic expertise, and the Jones Course will loan any specialty equipment for aeration or other jobs necessary in the once-a-year program.

Saying the restoration project doesn't have to do with politics or political parties but with the game of golf, Jones said: "The White House is the peoples' house. It has trees planted by Andrew Jackson. It has the cuttings from a tree planted by John Quincy Adams. The

Watson assails short course 'lip service'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Long-time PGA star Tom Watson said more mini-, four- and five-hole golf courses should be built in the United States to encourage and develop junior golf. The demise of caddie programs and the increasing costs to play 18 holes are keeping U.S. youngsters from learning and playing the game, he said.

"Mini-courses" are happening in Kansas City. A three-hole course opened last month at Ironhorse Golf Club in Leawood. A four-hole course, sponsored by the Kansas City Golf Foundation, is planned for the Blue River Golf Academy in Swope Park.

"There are no places for kids to play," Watson said at a junior golf clinic at Blue River attended by 800 youngsters. "I've seen many times in Scotland and Ireland where they've set up small parks with four or five tiny greens, no bunkers, just a place for people learning the game to hit a ball to a target and putt the ball in a hole.

"This is the most important thing we can do for golf," Watson told the Kansas
