And I think that's Stephen Kay or Ross, Tillinghast or Ross. People won't care what's going to happen 20 or 30 years from now. You'd rather that a big-time player who won two majors designed a golf course. They would have made sure I could park my dozer close enough to the course. They dabbled in golf course architecture. Their father. Carter Morrish has been around the likes of Jack Nicklaus, Arnold Palmer, and Gene Sarazen. He's the only kid with a USGA-proven blood runs thick in design business. A baby eagle finds a perch on a fairway at Garland Resort in Lewiston, Mich. Jack Nicklaus and Gene Sarazen team up on a course design, you know there's something big happening. The two legends have put their heads together for the first time on the design of The Legends West Course, one of two courses in phase one of Diablo Grande development, and a luxury polo and golf resort. 33,000 acres — that's 42 square miles, twice the size of the island of Bermuda — Diablo Grande calls itself the largest master-planned community west of the Mississippi. Once completed, Diablo will feature five residential neighborhoods, a polo and equestrian center, 45 acres of vineyards (in the foothills of Oak Flat Ranch), and a luxury hotel and European spa. "The facility could have up to seven golf courses," said Don Panoz, president of the Diablo development who owns Chateau Elan in Georgia. Panoz is in the finishing stages of Diablo's first phase, 5,000 acres that will act as the hub, or village, for his final vision.
