pay rent, don't you?"

"Yes, sir, Mr. Vince," Bobby replied (just a tad on the nervous side).

"Well, I'm sure if you want to continue to live at home we can come to terms on rent," Dad said. "Let's say, $20 a week? How does that sound to you?"

"Sure, Dad, whatever," I said.

As I reached again for the money, minus the $20 rent, Dad said, "What about food? Will you be eating all your meals at home, or will you be eating out?"

"Of course, I'll still be eating at home," I shot back.

"I think $20 will cover your food each week. Oh, yeah, you will probably want your Mom to continue to do your laundry and ironing? And, of course, you'll need new clothes for school this fall. Will you be paying your own doctor bills, or do you want me to take a flat amount to cover your medical expenses?"

"Let's see now," he continued, "that's $20 for rent, $20 for food, $10 for laundry and ironing, $10 toward medical expenses, $10 toward buying new clothes for school. Oh, I almost forgot school supplies. That's another

$5. I'm sure we've overlooked some things, but this is a good start."

I was in shock, and the employees were in shock. My $75 was gone! There was nothing left. After a moment of silence, which seemed like an eternity, I blurted out, "Dad, now I have nothing!"

My Dad said, "That's not true at all, son. You have your rent, food and laundry paid in full for a week, school supplies, medical coverage, and you will be able to sport some new clothes for fall."

"But, I have no money for anything else," I said.

My Dad's response still rings clear in my ears today. "Look, son, you wanted equal pay. Well, you got it and with it comes added responsibility. You must not have considered that when you went on strike."

Sadly, I said, "No, sir, I didn't."

Swallowing as much pride as a 12-year-old could stand, I said, rather sheepishly, "If it's OK with you, Dad, I'd like to forget this strike stuff and just go back to being your son. I'll be glad to take my $5."

My Dad said: "You didn't ever stop being my son, Buddy. But I'll be glad to settle this strike by giving you back your $5 spending money."

Maybe your son or daughter doesn't quite understand why they're not getting paid exactly like the other employees. I challenge you to help them see that more compensation creates more independence and more independence creates more responsibilities. As someone so aptly put it, there is no free lunch!

Some people would say I missed a lot from age 10 to 18. But, the time I spent with my Dad and the things he taught me about life and business, I wouldn't trade for a million bucks. Like I said, my Dad was then and is now the coolest Dad on Earth. Thanks, Dad.
