The trend-setting youth market is speaking and corporations are listening to the consumer group which is known to spend $100 billion annually.

"What's happening right now is for real," said Steve Jubb, director of the PGA Foundation. "It is changing the game of golf before our eyes and its changing golf for the better. But as an industry, we must face the challenges that are brought with the wave. Our challenge is to provide opportunities for everyone, everywhere to enjoy this great sport."

Whether considered the "Tiger Effect" or an idea that has met its time, the coming decade is being termed the "Junior Golf Decade." Throughout 1997, more than 2.7 million U.S. boys and girls, ages 5-18, participated in the sport.

Corporations around the country have begun to tap into a market that plays a major role in family buying decisions, with most purchases based on brand name insistence by these kids. Sponsors know that positive buying experiences in youth translate into adult brand loyalty.

Junior golf projects are receiving support from some of the sport's biggest names such as the USGA, the PGA and LPGA. A group call the National Association of Junior Golfers (NAJG) has been uniting corporations with junior golf programs and organizations across the country, serving as the network for junior golf and corporate marketing efforts. In fact, in 1997, NAJG initiatives reached an estimated 1.5 million youth.

"The National Association of Junior Golfers is able to provide services to youth and junior programs as a direct result of corporate support," said Executive Director Tom Griffin. "The NAJG has an immediate need to develop more corporate relationships that will enable us to carry on our service to children worldwide."

Tournaments such as the Pepsi Little People's Golf Championship are expanding annually and proving to be popular venues for business marketing. Whether supplying products and services or contributing funds to a program, junior golf ventures have become the latest way for corporations to reach a market that until recently had remained relatively untapped.

The NAJG offers a great opportunity for Sanford to capitalize on our flagship's brand 'Sharpie' marker while supporting and helping young people broaden their experiences through the game of golf," said Robert S. Parker, president of Sanford, on the company's involvement with the NAJG.
