ASGCA panel targets dangers to the health of golf

By MARK LESLIE

CHARLESTON, S.C. — Trying to head off dangers to the health of golf, leaders of the game’s major associations are targeting equipment and balls that add too much distance, the cost to play, the “intimidation factor” in learning, and attracting and keeping new golfers.

Speaking at the annual conference of the American Society of Golf Course Architects here, U.S. Golf Association (USGA) President F. Morgan “Buzz” Taylor warned that, if measures are not taken, golf’s popularity could sink like tennis’s. It was an ominous statement, illustrated by the fact that NBC Sports is dropping its contract for coverage of Wimbledon because “it can’t sell the time,” Taylor said.

Similar remarks, pointed toward fixing any holes in the dike of the expanding sport of golf, came from PGA of America Executive

USGA turns over U.S. Open management reins

By PETER BLAIS

PINEHURST, N.C. — The United States Golf Association (USGA) has handed over responsibility for managing June’s U.S. Open at Pinehurst No. 2 to an outside party — Pinehurst Championship Management (PCM).

PCM is the sports marketing division of ClubCorp, the Dallas-based firm that owns and operates Pinehurst. PCM will be responsible for everything from handling transportation issues to developing corporate partners.

The USGA will retain control over what occurs “inside the ropes,” according to the USGA’s Tim Moraghan, who oversees course preparation for U.S. Open events for the USGA Rules and Competition Committee.

“Outside the ropes,” said PCM head Jon Wagner, “everything with regard to marketing, corporate business...”