PRO BUSINESS HANDBOOK USE IS URGED

Providence, R. I.—United States Rubber Co. advises pros: "If you want to do something to make your business better, get out your Golf Professionals’ Handbook of Business, which the United States Rubber Co. furnished you the early part of the season, and carefully read over the 119 suggestions contained in it. Every one of these suggestions has been used by some pro who made money by it.

"What golf professionals think of the Handbook is expressed by a representative statement from one of the many unsolicited letters we have received regarding it. "The Pro Handbook of Business is not only interesting but educational. I certainly hope it is fully appreciated. Any professional who cannot find time to read this book from cover to cover is too busy for his own good."

"One of the best ways for a pro to impress his club officers with what the pro’s problems are—and what the pro has to do to solve them so that he can make a living—is to hand his copy of the Professionals’ Handbook of Business to the club officer who is most important to him, and ask him to read it. When he has read this book his eyes will be opened to the business problems the pro is up against, and he will become much more interested in the pro, even to the point of working with him to make his business better. All club officials everywhere need a lot of the education that a reading of the book will give them. Numerous thinking pros have done this with much success.

"If you have not already done so, see to it that your assistant thoroughly reads and absorbs the 119 suggestions. He is your salesman, and to educate him in the matters outlined in this fine handbook is a big step toward putting more money in your cash drawer.

"If you have lost your copy of the Golf Professionals’ Handbook of Business, write for another one to the United States Rubber Co., Golf Ball Division, Providence, Rhode Island."

CHAPMAN, RING AND B. POINSETT
IN NEW L. A. YOUNG LINEUP

Detroit, Mich.—E. E. Chapman, who has been with the L. A. Young Golf Co., makers of Walter Hagen equipment, since its inception, has been made general sales manager of that organization, vice T. G. Philpot, resigned. Chapman is an experienced man in the golf field, in general retailing and in sales management. Prior to his promotion he was in charge of Ohio territory for the Hagen outfit, making his headquarters at Columbus.

Walter Ring, widely known in the golf field, and a veteran with the Young company, will cover general field activities as “Chap’s” team-mate. Ring has been in charge of the New York headquarters there, although greeting many dawns with his eyelids ballasted by mainline roadbed and bus dust.

Ben Poinsett, who has been teamed with his brother Allen in Young’s New York office, has been transferred to the Pacific Coast branch of the Walter Hagen Young Men’s Society for Sales and Steam.

Rest of the batting order remains the same. Mr. Tom Robbins and his assistant, Master Jim McGonnigle, Texas amateurs, who were transferred to the Young Chicago office by previous G. H. Q. orders, are doing prettily in the metropolitan time and finding 36 holes of Chicago sap jack very much to their liking each and every Sabbath.
