you have avid listeners. The station will be glad to help you compile a definite check. But even if there is no immediate sponsorship—and by immediate I mean at least a year—keep at it. It might be a slight expense to you and it’ll take some of your time, but it’ll bring them to you at the club.

It’s difficult to say which is better: golf lessons or golf gossip. Your own capabilities and local conditions hold the answer. The lessons give the people the idea that they are getting something for nothing. Of course, you give them just enough so they will come to you for the real thing. The golf gossip, by mentioning the names of local people, wins you a lot of friends. Say something good about Duffer X. Thereafter he, his family, all his relatives and friends are your boosters for life.

But don’t stop there. In fact, it is only the beginning. Next, make arrangements with your local station for broadcasts directly from the club grounds. Here your first bit of trouble will be the cost, for remote broadcasts take extra engineers, telephone wires or short wave equipment. To defray these expenses there is the chance of sponsorship, your club coming through, or perhaps you and the station working out some deal. Remember, it usually takes a little money to make money.

Novelty Events Click Best

What to broadcast at the club! Oddly enough, my experience has been that the club matches are not as popular with the radio audience—your source of customers and new players—as are the novelty events. One of the first things you want to arrange is a hole-in-one tournament, open to everybody in the district. To broadcast a portion of the event is a “natural.” People who have already shot are listening to compare scores, and usually others will be at the same radio; some are interested to see how friends have fared, others are just interested. Spread it out over several days, if possible, and keep the time on the air short.

Last year an Olean (N.Y.) Club and Station WHDL worked together on a very successful hole-in-one tournament. The pro and myself took turns telling the listeners who was shooting and what the result was. We would “bet” on each contestant, and that added more interest as we were both well known in local golf circles.

Other novelty tournaments that lend themselves to broadcasting are driving contests, putting contests, and children’s matches. In brief, most games played with a golf club and a golf ball generally have a “twist” to them, are usually humorous, and can be aired.

A word about tournaments! If you do broadcast one, be sure that it and the broadcasting of it are given plenty of ballyhoo beforehand. “Big” matches have the habit of falling dead on the air, and you can’t afford that. Unless one of the country’s major events comes to your club, forget the detailed description of the whole affair. Better to set up a microphone at the 18th hole and describe what happens there. Interview—and do this yourself, if you possibly can find the time—the incoming players, get their scores, compare them with others, and give general news about the tournament. Again, keep it brief and just hit the high-spots. Get a group of short (five or ten minutes) spots on the air and forget about a straight hour or so.

O. K., Mr. Pros, take it away. And remember, if you need any more suggestions or details, drop me a line—I’ll be glad to help out any way I can.

Copy the Docs—Lew Waldron, Mohawk CC (Chicago district) pro, suggests that the bedside manners of doctors are worth studying as an element in resultful golf instruction. “Some doctors,” says Lew, “say a few words to the patient and the patient becomes confident he’s going to get well. Other doctors may have an unfortunate manner that makes the patient feel as though the situation were so hopelessly serious there’s no use of the patient trying to help himself.” Waldron counsels against the use of technical terms such as “open and shut face, pronation” and even, in some cases “pivoting” in the instruction of the average golfer. “Might as well talk to them in Sanskrit for all they can make out of it,” reflects Lew.
