should there be any? Plenty of clubs will be glad to donate a place in which to hold such schools.

Teaching Golf to the Masses

Once the classes are well under way the students themselves could be given opportunities to apply what they have learned by giving lessons under the coaching of the senior instructors.

This can be done by the clinic method just as in medicine or dentistry. Here in Boston, for example, we have an institution known as the Forsyth dental clinic. Those who cannot afford the services of private dentists can come here, and free of charge, their teeth are attended to by students of the Harvard dental school who do the work under the close supervision of some of the finest dental surgeons in the profession.

Our golf clinics should be thrown open to youngsters, to caddies and to players on high school golf teams who would be glad of the chance to have free lessons from student professionals under the expert guidance of the leading senior pros in the district.

What an opportunity for these young players! What a break for the ambitious lad who wants a real training as a golf instructor! What a fine challenge to the abilities of our best professionals—and, above all, what a splendid chance for the PGA to set up real standards of proficiency that would enable the clubs to get a line on the best golf instructors in the rising generation!

We have the men. We have the means. It seems to me the whole problem comes down to one vital question. Have we got the energy and the ability to work together to organize such a plan and to put it to work for the advancement of our profession?

WPA Offers Cut-Rate Instruction.—Group golf instruction at the modest price of 25 cents for 12 lessons, one of the latest WPA projects, is the subject of a recent piece by Billy Sixty, golf editor of the Milwaukee Journal who conducts the well known column, “Going Like Sixty,” in that paper. The lessons, which were offered by pros Tom Dobson and George Kinsman, Sr., in a downtown Milwaukee office building, got under way last January. The series was attended by a capacity enrollment of 600 from the beginning.
