Expected, however, in a material sense, for the servicemen, of course. Its therapeutic value to the convalescent is especially great since it is an absorbing game which occupies not only his body, but his mind. Doctors point out that anything which can get the patient's thoughts away from himself and his injury hastens his recovery immeasurably.

Whether the rehabilitation program of the future will be able to count on continued use of this sport is a doubtful issue. Apparently most resources in the Pacific coast area are already exhausted, since the Red Cross there has appealed to other areas for aid. Civilians have been generous but they can't offer golf balls when they don't have them. The golfing outlook isn't bright.

But if you do happen to know a fellow who has 25,000 golf balls . . .

Preview of Golf's Postwar Picture

★ Golfers thoughts, in a general sense, are beginning to dwell more and more on the postwar era and they are high in their expectancy of miracle clubs and balls which will emerge from the factories when the shooting is all over. The marvelous developments in our war equipment plus the grape vine no doubt accounts for this thinking. Nevertheless, the thought is there, and there will be an awful let-down if the manufacturers do not come through.

Examination of the equipment field, in my opinion, does not warrant anyone thinking that mechanical improvements will be such that all one will have to do is to wave at the ball and that the club will do the rest. As a matter of fact, very little can be done along these lines which has not been done before. Much can be expected, however, in a material sense, for it is generally agreed that we have a long way to go in this respect and we can look forward to getting the benefit of better materials without a doubt.

We can look forward to better conditioned golf courses after the war as many clubs have formulated programs with this in view. The depression period plus the war period has had an adverse effect on many courses and it is generally realized that much will have to be done to bring them back to shape. There will be many mechanical improvements in up-keep machinery and we will see hand labor more and more eliminated until it approaches the vanishing point.

I met a pretty fair cross section of the golf pros during the past winter and they have high hopes of good postwar business to make up for the lean war years. However, they are fearful of unfair competition which has always been their bogey man. They are agreed that they do not fear fair competition and no one will dispute that, everything being equal, the pro will win out every time. They are looking for a Moses to lead them into this promised land and, although many of the pro problems are brought about by themselves or are imaginary, it must be conceded that something will have to be done to give them a fair shake.

A large number of women are now employed in the golf shops and I expect that they will still be there in the postwar era as it is the consensus of opinion that they handle the golf merchandise and books much better than the average pro or assistant. They have also improved the pro credit rating and improved to a great extent the general appearance of the show rooms. We can expect that fewer men assistants will be employed and that the set-up of the average pro shop will be the pro himself, a lady assistant and a club cleaning boy. We can look for a women's organization eventually with their own rules and regulations and perhaps affiliated with the P.G.A.
