swung, the follow through or "picture finish" will come without being forced.

After the swinging exercises are completed, a question and answer period is held. Uncertain points about grip, stance, and swing are cleared up.

By the end of the series of 3 lessons the students are well drilled in the fundamentals of the golf swing and are ready for individual lessons.

At the end of the final lesson each student is given a rule book and a small booklet listing the local rules and explaining the etiquette of golf.

The unselfish idea behind Col. Baird's program is simply this; to acquaint each student with the fundamentals of the golf stroke and to provide her a sound basis for further instruction at the hands of a pro. This idea is particularly valuable to Army wives since they move about frequently and a prolonged course of instructions might be interrupted before its completion.
