of golf ball, brought many thousands of customers into pro shops and kept them as repeat buyers. Spalding’s new Executive woods already are showing that they are going to be a big factor in pro shop sales increases in 1961.

In spite of some of the very conservative business forecasts we have seen in the financial papers, we are extremely enthusiastic about the prospects for the coming year. Spalding confidently looks to 1961 as the greatest year yet for fine golf equipment.

Top Quality Market — Pros’ Part — Growing Fastest
By Robert D. Rickey
Vp, The MacGregor Company

Interest in golf literally exploded in 1960, creating the greatest market for top quality equipment that our industry has known. In the case of MacGregor, we were overwhelmed by the demand in spite of greatly increased manufacturing facilities.

In addition to this tremendous growth, golfers of the ’60s are very selective and intelligent buyers who demand not only quality, but equipment that will satisfy their individual needs as recommended by the professional. Consequently, we are offering a more diversified line of clubs which feature four distinctly different shaft feels, a choice of two grips, etc.

“Eye appeal” has become an extremely important factor. Today a golf club must not only play good . . . it must also look good.

The prestige of owning fine equipment has become a factor that manufacturers can’t overlook. For example, we sold a record number of Kangaroo bags which retailed at $125 and up.

It is our belief that the prospects have never been greater for the sale of top line merchandise. With the many advancements in club, bag and accessory design, the outlook for ’61 is brighter than ever before. Professionals have the opportunity to convince people that they owe it to themselves to use only the finest.

The outstanding features that we’ve introduced in our 1961 professional golf line makes obsolete every piece of equipment in rack rooms throughout the country. We are prepared for this tremendously increased market and feel that the professional, in turn, will be quick to capitalize on the demand for quality merchandise, which is exclusively his.

Recognition of Pro Service Helps Boost Sales
By H. W. Colburn

Increased participation in golf in 1960 has been most encouraging. Despite inclement weather in most of the country in April and May, sale of equipment by pros was comparatively good. The greatest increase in golfers and play has been at the public and semi-public courses so, naturally, the professionals at pay-as-you-play locations have had a large increase in club and ball sales. This follows the trend established at the private clubs.

Well operated clubs and courses have increased recognition and appreciation of the value of competent professional service. This has resulted in the construction of many fine pro shops at private and public courses where the golfer can get expert buying aid and has the convenience of large stocks. This has been particularly true of apparel and has identified the professional as a merchant who can compete in price and quality.

The professional’s progress in the growing golf business also has been marked by his effective activity in Christmas golf gift sales promotion and other special events. The successful professional obviously has learned that the volume of sales and profit is in direct ratio to well timed, accurately directed advertising and sales efforts.

Our observations point to further sound growth of golf in 1961 and we have set up our production schedule accordingly.

Dunlop Sales Set Record, New Plant for 1961
By Paul W. Gibbs
Sales Mgr., Sports Div., Dunlop Tire & Rubber Corp.

More Dunlop golf equipment has been sold in pro shops in 1960 than in any previous year. Our studies with the professional point to continuance of the upward sales curve.

The new pro-only, Dunlop Super Maxfli has received a better reception from players and professionals who supply them than any other ball we have made. Now that we have the new Dunlop Maxfli clubs we are certain to have, in 1961, a substantial increase over Dunlop’s highly satisfactory sales figures for this year.

On October 18 we will dedicate the
