NEWS OF THE INDUSTRY continued

LA, Chicago, Cornell sites of club management seminars

The National Golf Foundation will conduct four three-day Seminars for club officials, directors and committeemen, according to Jerry Marlatt, Director of the Foundation's Club Management Division and past president of the Club Managers Association of America.

Recognizing that many of the country's golf clubs are facing many critical problems that will force them to be operated more efficiently, the Foundation has scheduled seminars at the following sites and dates:

June 11-12-13, Riviera Country Club, Los Angeles, Calif.

October 1-2-3, Cornell University, Ithaca, N.Y.

November 19-20-21, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

Participants in the seminars will be addressed by top experts in the golf management field on pertinent subjects including: John P. Jaeger on club accounting; Wesley A. Clark on the duties of club officers, directors and committee chairmen; Richard D. Baker on risk management — an alternative to insurance; Jerry Hurley on legal and legislative problems of today's club officials; Bob Williams on everything you wanted to know about a golf superintendent, but were afraid to ask; Hubby Habjan on knowing and understanding your golf professional with Don Rossi, NGF Executive Director and Marlatt acting as moderators.

For further information, write the National Golf Foundation, 707 Merchandise Mart, Chicago, Ill. 60654.

Public course association chooses regional directors

William Saunders, president of the recently formed Association of Public Golf Courses, announced that eight members have been selected to act as regional board of director members. They are as follows: Northeast — H. Bailey Trull, Tewksbury, Mass.; Southeast — Art Young, Stuart, Fla.; Midwest — Larry Snode, Alliance, Oh.; Rocky Mountain — James Dorian, Derby, Kan.; Pacific Northwest — Wallace Staatz, Rodeo, Ca.; Pacific Southwest — Pat Markouich, Rodeo, Ca.; Mid-Atlantic — Charles Lynch, Alexandria, Va. and Southwest — Dick Forester, Jr., Houston, Tex.

Mild Augusta facelift made play tougher during Masters

During the recent Masters, superintendents and pros watching the tournament in person or on television might have noticed a mild facelift over Augusta National from the previous year.

According to Masters chairman Clifford Roberts, Augusta came up with new sand for all its bunkers and a herringbone-type of french tiling was installed in 18 bunkers in order to eliminate pools of water quickly after heavy rains.

Tees on 2,4,6,11 and 17 had been completely rebuilt to allow better drainage and uniform surfaces. Probably the most extensive work was done on 13, since it was moved back 10 yards. The green also underwent some rebuilding. There had been problems on this hole in the past because of a sour soil condition, resulting from too much shade. A new pin placement area in the far left section of the green became available, after remodeling.

Biggest improvement, though, throughout Augusta might have been the new winter grasses established on the fairways and greens. Through research at Rutgers and Penn State, a combination rye grass and a superior type of fescue will aid the course noticeably.
