office survivors

SOMETHING COMPLETELY DIFFERENT

BY MARK LUCE

JUST BECAUSE YOUR BOSS IS A JERK DOESN'T MEAN THAT YOU HAVE TO BECOME ONE, TOO

1.) Don't share personal information at work. This will only fly back in your face—often embarrassingly.

2.) Shoot straight. Calmly state your position and back it up with evidence (and, hopefully, allies). In the long run, people will commend you as a "stand-up guy/gal," which is far better than the unflattering swear words that could come your way if you flat-out lie.

3.) Play it close to the vest. Don't place yourself in the middle of an office feud. Stand on the sidelines and watch the madness unfold. Better this than siding with a loser.

4.) Cover yourself. Make sure you have legitimate, well-reasoned strategies and contingencies for when things go awry—because they will.

5.) Mind your own business. Actively cultivating gossip will eventually lead to folks gossiping about you (well, more than they already do).

6.) Don't take it personally. Sure, you're going to screw up, and someone will let you have it. Acknowledge the error and move on, determined not to make the same mistake again.

7.) Know the score. Unless you know exactly what is going on, keep your mouth shut. The wrong words at the wrong time can be deadly.

8.) When in doubt ask. While there is such a thing as a stupid question, it's far better to be stupid now than really sorry and unemployed later.

9.) Kill them with kindness. No need to be obsequious, but being a good soldier has one distinct advantage—when you do speak up passionately, people will take notice.

Ultimately, surviving in the world of work comes down to one simple thing: Carry yourself with confidence. It will get you further, with more respect and less pain than running around and shouting that you are master of all you survey.

Mark Luce apprenticed as a corporate, backstabbing yestman while an editor at a large metropolitan newspaper. Now he is a pliant freelancer who lives humbly in Lawrence, Kan.