“With the products we’re bringing to the market now, you’re seeing a shift in our focus toward helping golf course superintendents manage not just diseases, but environmental pressures as well,” said Tredway.

“You look at issues like water quality and the availability of quality irrigation water,” he continued. “That’s a definite challenge, so if we can develop products that will help improve the turf’s efficiency with which it uses water, that would be a great thing for the industry.”

As footprints were evident on the greens from the morning mist, Shawn Potter, head of marketing, Lawn and Garden, was inside talking to me about Briskway and Secure, two brand new products to emerge from Syngenta R&D onto the market.

Briskway, which received registration a month ago, is a DMI-containing fungicide intended to be used in hotter climates. It’s effective on summer diseases and has plant health benefits such as water use efficiency, shade tolerance and improved color.

Secure, on the other hand, is a multi-site contact fungicide in a new chemical class. Containing the new active ingredient fluazinam, it has no known resistance.

In addition to all of this was a ton of North Carolina barbecue (which we’re still craving), and, of course, a round of golf. It was a great day from beginning to end.

Like a President Passing

By Karl Danneberger, Ph.D.

Stan Zontek passed away recently due to a massive heart attack. I knew Stan since the early 1980s, when he would come to Columbus to speak to my turf classes. Stan always behaved the same, whether speaking publicly or to me privately as a friend. His comments, ranging from golf to turf to wine, were always insightful.

Many people knew Stan better than I did and will no doubt have a much better eulogy than me, but hearing the news of his passing was like hearing of a former president passing… and in some ways, Stan was the President of Golf Turf.

Now reminiscing and thinking of Stan, all I can do is smile. You just liked being around him. You never knew what he might say or do. He loved to hold court among those willing to listen, and he spoke in the same tenor no matter the crowd.

Stan enjoyed speaking and traveling, oftentimes on his own time and expense. Stan especially loved traveling through the United Kingdom — “The Home of Golf” — and the rest of Europe. I will always cherish my memories of Stan, such as sitting across from him at a farmhouse table in Slovenia, drinking homemade “wine” at 9:30 a.m. and talking turf, world events, and his newly purchased Shelby Cobra Mustang.

Stan was like a kid when he looked ahead to the 2013 U.S. Open at Merion, where in many ways it all started for him. And the fact that Merion will be next to host the U.S. Open might be a fitting end to Stan’s USGA career.

I miss him… but can’t stop smiling. Stan, I raise my glass to you.

Golfdom Accepting Graffis Award Nominations

Do you know someone who, through outside-the-box thinking, is making a positive impact on a course’s bottom line? Drop us a note and tell us why he or she is deserving of our Herb Graffis Businessperson of the Year Award.

The winner not only gets a trip to the GIS on Golfdom, he or she will be the subject of a cover story in the magazine.

Paul Chojnacky was the inaugural winner of the award (Read about him in our January 2012 issue). With his innovative and sustainable approach to golf maintenance, the superintendent at Pasatiempo Golf Club in Santa Cruz, Calif., embodied the pioneering spirit and business savvy of golf industry legend and Golfdom’s founder, Herb Graffis, for whom the award is named. Graffis left an indelible mark on the golf industry. If you know someone who’s doing the same, email Editor-in-Chief Seth Jones at sjones@northcoastmedia.net.
