He's counting blades of grass!

John Kolb is a special kind of census taker. He counts the number of blades of grass in a square foot of turf.

You see, John is Assistant Agronomist at our Research & Development Center. At the moment, he's recording the density of a mixture of blue grass, fescue and colonial bent. When he's through, he'll turn the figures over to our Engineering Department.

These figures help our engineers design Toro power mowers that cut smoother, more evenly—on any kind of grass, since our Research Center—the only one of its kind in the power mower industry—grows and tests grass samples from all over the United States on more than 300 different plots.

You, of course, get the benefit of this painstaking research and design when you specify Toro grass-cutting machinery. You get the right mower for your needs—the finest mower the industry can produce. You can bet on it!

* Got a turf maintenance problem? Give it to our Research Center through your Toro distributor! No charge or obligation, of course.

A "must" for fall renovation

the AERIFIER *

Fall is the best time to improve poor turf areas. New seed can become established with a minimum of weed competition. Now is a good time to feed grasses. Lime is best applied in the fall. Superintendents recognize that all these treatments are most effective when used in combination with the Aerifier. Use the Aerifier to cultivate and loosen soil — to prepare a seedbed, to admit fertilizer and lime to the root zone, to permit fall rains to penetrate soil.

Many superintendents are faced with a new problem this fall — increased compaction caused by traffic of golf buggies. The Aerifier's "cultivating action" is the most effective way to offset the ill effects of too much traffic.

Two good Aerifiers are available for large acreage. The F-G Triplex Gang is the favorite at many eighteen hole golf courses. The new Grasslan Aerifier provides six foot coverage with a single unit—an excellent model for limited budgets.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPING
AT YOUR PRO SHOP

Pro Drive for Huge Golf Gift Sales Volume to be Pushed by Powerful New Advertising

By JOE GRAFFIS

PRO SHOP Christmas gift business has greatly increased because conditions are almost perfect for the pro who is a businessman.

The Pennsylvania professional who made that observation ought to know. December was the second biggest month of shop sales volume he had in 1953. It was his biggest month of net profit. His operating costs didn’t have to include his assistants or a club-cleaning boy. The costs did include advertising Christmas golf gifts.

This pro discovered that at Christmas the club members, their wives and children were looking for help in spending money.

“Every time I suggested a golf gift my suggestions were welcomed,” the pro added. “They all are in the spending mood and want to buy something that will be just right for whoever gets the gift.

“Around Christmas time they expect to spend and they want to spend.

Lost Sales At Christmas

“I didn’t realize until last year that I was doing my members a big and appreciated service in simplifying their Christmas shopping. I thought I had better be making money in December and turning excess inventory into cash instead of going south with my wife right after our season closed.

“Another thing made me decide to stay home and give the golf Christmas gift business a lot of attention. The previous three or four springs when I opened up at the club I’d noticed many of our men and women golfers had new golf equipment that I didn’t sell them.

“Often the information was volunteered... that this new equipment was a Christmas gift. The stores had been on the job when I wasn’t.

"Like a lot of other pros I’d complained about store competition and cut prices. Then I awoke to see that the stores didn’t have any competition from me for the big Christmas gift business.

"Something else I learned was that the stores sold plenty of golf equipment and apparel as Christmas gifts at prices higher than I’d get for the same or better merchandise at my shop.

"Many pros haven’t the slightest idea of the real value of their potential service to Christmas shoppers. What this service amounts to is that the pro tells the shopper what the pro would like to sell because he knows it’s needed.

"I can see from what our members wear and from the bags in my racks a possibility of $20,000 in Christmas business. By starting to work on Christmas business last September I got December business that grossed over $13,000.

Company Gift Sales Big

"In that gross was one order of more than $1300 for personalized golf balls I got from a member who gave them to his company’s customers. They were top brand balls at the full price.

"Perhaps some pros at other clubs didn’t like that. I’m sorry but if they missed the boat and didn’t sell balls for one of their members to give customers who belong to our club, it’s the other pros’ tough luck. They can’t kick if they lose sales they don’t go after.”

For almost 20 years GOLFDOM has been pushing the idea that the pro shop logically is one of the most valuable sources of Christmas gifts. Numerous manufacturers, especially the foremost ball makers, have been supplying Christmas packages. But the proposition never caught on strong until after the war.

Then it got going so successfully that the leading pro businessmen report that Christmas business is a substantial part of their year’s profit.

Create Golf Gift Habit

One important element is still missing to make the golf Christmas gift plan produce millions in sales for pros. Not enough of the golfing public yet realizes golf Christmas gifts are the right answer to perplexing Christmas shopping problems. To focus public attention on pro shop Christmas gift buying requires much better planning and advertising than generally has been done by pros.

To provide pros with a service that will bring them a huge amount of business now going to competing retailers GOLFDOM has devised a powerful advertising and merchandising plan for pros only.

It is a Christmas golf gift shopping guide attractively produced to rate high in appearance, in service to shoppers and in sales power. It is designed to exhibit the pro shop as the foremost retail establishment for gifts for the golfers.

Strong Ad Drive; Low Price

The “Christmas Shopping At Your Pro Shop” book is being made available for pro businessman use at a low price, with the cooperation of leading manufacturers of golf equipment, apparel and accessories.

The need of such Christmas golf gift advertising that will give alert pros command of the holiday shopping is keenly realized. Within a week after “Christmas Shopping At Your Pro Shop” was announced to a test list of 900 professionals 279 (31%) of them had advised GOLFDOM of their interest in using this key to Christmas profits.

"Christmas Shopping At Your Pro Shop" will be delivered to pros early in October for addressing and mailing to their players. The book is planned for use by pros at all types of courses: private, semi-private and public. It is a quality production but at low cost to pros.

"Christmas Shopping At Your Pro Shop" is planned and produced to fit into an easily workable, practical plan of pro Christmas gift merchandising.

Must Plan Early

The pro who intends to do a good job for his players and himself on Christmas gift service and selling has to begin planning now.

He can start, in many cases, by checking bags and seeing what’s needed.

If he’s at a semi-private or public course he will have to begin getting his mailing list ready.

Planning his Christmas stock is an important job he’d better get under way without delay. The pro also has to do his Christmas shopping early.

Robert M. Williams, supt., Beverly CC, Chicago, and chmn., Educational committee, Golf Course Supts.’ Assn. of America, strongly believes that basic business principles of golf course maintenance should receive more attention.

Williams declares that club officials and members who don’t understand operating problems and performances in course maintenance lack this understanding because the picture hasn’t been put to them clearly and regularly.

He points out that the technicalities of agronomy figuring in maintenance are specialized procedures club officials and other golfers usually don’t know and don’t care about knowing. The superintendent is employed to be the practical authority on maintenance technicalities.

But what the green-chairman and other officials can understand and should be told is how course maintenance is being conducted as a business and how the money is being spent, Williams emphasizes. He says that with course maintenance costs at leading clubs running from $30,000 to $75,000 annually, understandably club officials should and must get up-to-date and periodical reports on the operations. Williams adds: "This is the part of the superintendent’s management job that his officials can understand and on which they have to be fully informed. And it’s generally slighted in the rush of other duties."

"The man who is an outstanding expert at steel making, furniture manufacturing, retailing or in some profession has complex work enough with his own job without being required to know about the perplexities of course maintenance," Williams says. "He is devoting a lot of time and
