WHERE DID ALL THE GREEN GRASS GO?

This may very well be the sad title of future ballads by ecology-conscious rock groups. Unfortunately, some of the largest expanses of America's green grass, now in the form of urban golf courses, will soon disappear. In fact, since 1968, over 100 urban courses have been wiped out by man's ever-expanding concrete structures -- by housing, industry, and shopping centers -- and, even more insidiously, by excessive and narrow-minded taxation. More explicitly, in New York, Cleveland, Los Angeles and Chicago alone, over 11,000 acres of golf course land have been destroyed in the last decade.

GOLFDOM's sister publication, GOLF Magazine, in its October issue, presents the sad state of affairs in a major article titled "GOLF: America's Vanishing Green Belt." And GOLFDOM, in this issue, discusses the problem in "The Vanishing Urban Course."

As publishers of the leading consumer and industry publications in the world of golf, we would be less than responsible if we did not bring the fact of this alarming situation to the attention of the principals involved. We are doing this now to both consumer and industry and we have gone even further, by recommending a strong five-point plan as a solution.

However, the industry must now, with the backing of a concerned public, pick up the ball. Golfers will be incensed by the grim situation exposed in GOLF's exclusive article; but club administrators, pros, menagers, and other officials and organizations must lead the way in effecting a solution -- in cooperation with enlightened city, state and national government officials.

We know you will be shocked and aroused both as a member of the industry and as a private citizen by these articles; however, unless these emotions are channeled toward solid action, little will be accomplished.

Let's do something about it. Now!

Cordially,

Warren Heeg, Jr.
Again this Christmas, you can offer your customers the gift that goes farther: the long-distance Titleist golf ball, number one ball on the pro tour for 22 years in a row, and number one in pro shop sales. This year we’ve put a dozen in a handsome gift box, and we’ll have them imprinted with your customer’s name (or his company name) at no extra charge.

Like all Acushnet products, Titleist is sold through golf course pro shops only. Not just at Christmastime, but all year long.

Golf and the Vital Issue of Ecology

36 The Vanishing Urban Course
If permitted to continue unharnessed, urban sprawl will leave behind only concrete and asphalt where once the open space and greenery of golf courses offered respite. The club industry and the public must join to halt further devastation. GOLF Magazine offers a hard-hitting plan of action.

40 Adjusting to the Environment........................................... William Day
Golf courses are ideal ecological testing areas, provided the approach blends sophistication and sensitivity to the land.

42 Will the Insects Take Over? ............................................. Fred V. Grau
What is the future of turfgrass without the traditional control insecticides? Alternative natural controls presently are being explored, which will help the superintendent reconcile the problems of turf care and pollution.

45 Contribute to Survive.................................................. Eliot C. Roberts
Because of increasing urbanization, golf courses must begin to strengthen their positions in the public's mind by bettering the total community environment.

Alliance draws up high power program

When troubles multiply until it seems that nothing more can possibly happen, the example of sincere men working together to turn problems into opportunities is inspiration to the rest of us.

Such an event occurred—again—at the third meeting of the Allied Assn., renamed the Alliance of Club and Golf Organizations.

Much more than a new name came out of the meeting at Riviera Beach, Fla., on July 20th. Attended by representatives of the USGA, PGA, Golf Course Superintendents of America, Club Managers Assn., American Society of Golf Course Architects, National Golf Foundation and National Club Assn., the Alliance renewed some old relationships and laid groundwork for a pioneer, industry-wide venture into the legal, legislative and public relations fields.

The Alliance broke new ground in undertaking the development of a legal and legislative program. At its previous meeting last May members of the Alliance had requested the National Club Assn. to draw up such a program.

The plan presented at the meeting would permit the Alliance to coordinate its efforts in diverse areas such as national and state legislation on income, excise and real estate taxes, the Fair Labor Standards Act, civil rights of private association and the ecological and financial burdens of maintaining open spaces and recreational property.

Of particular concern to those present is a growing tendency on the part of many states to tax golf course property on the basis of its potentially highest and best use. Faced with the prospect of having their 120 to 140 acres taxed as if it were a high rise or a supermarket, many small private clubs and daily fee courses are considering abandoning their land and selling out to other interests. The resulting loss of golf courses and green areas (see "The Vanishing Urban Course," p. 36) can only have a detrimental effect on golf and ecology; and the Alliance, through a combination of education, publicity and favorable legislation, hopes to reverse this trend.

Other aspects of the Alliance program include action on the Tax Reform Act of 1969 and future tax legislation and a study of the new amendments to the Fair Labor Standards Act. Both the tax and the labor legislations will certainly markedly increase the cost of doing business for the small private membership club and on the investor-owned daily fee golf and swimming club.

Further, serious concern was expressed that recent legislation, which now taxes a portion of the income that a non-profit club can have, is both unrealistic and short sighted. Many fear that further legislation in this vein will only put additional, perhaps fatal, financial pressure on an already overburdened industry.

Other action planned by the Alliance program would institute a long range public relations effort and begin statistical studies that would include a club and golf census and an economic survey.

Although no final action was taken—the associations will submit the program to their directors and executive committees and report back to the Alliance at their next meeting later this year—the clearly expressed desire of the participants to work together and the time and effort put into the meeting becomes one of the most heartening events in a year that—so far, at least—has brought little but bad news to clubs.
Harley-Davidson electric cars can give you twice the distance.

Because a Harley-Davidson electric golf car releases only as much power as necessary to get from tee to green, you can drive our cars as much as fifty per cent farther between charges. This means, batteries last up to twice as long. It also means our cars cost far less to operate. Because charging costs are reduced. And did you know? One of the strongest parts of our electric car is made out of paper. It's our exclusive two-year warranty on all major electrical components including batteries. Harley-Davidson electric golf cars. They give you all the power you need. And some you don't.

We look at a bag from your customer's angle.

Your customers are looking for value, and we've put even more of that into the new Acushnet golf bags for 1971. The $100 bag pictured here is the perfect example. These are the selling features that will be an exclusive attraction to your golf course pro shop:

New this year is our Acushtex™ material, a reinforced vinyl. It scored as high as 308 psi in bursting strength - a 200% increase over our previous material. And it went beyond the limits of the testing equipment for tear resistance. That's tough.

A unique construction feature is our Perfect Edge®, a recessed stitching protected by double rows of raised plastic. Perfect Edge will add a longer, better-looking life to every bag it's on. It's another new feature this year.
