CLOSED TRANSFER AND MIXING SYSTEMS: This is a condensed version of a paper put out by the University of California, Cooperative Extension Suggestions for Closed Transfer and Mixing Systems for Small Volume Users. California regulations require that employees handle toxic liquid pesticides (carrying the single word "Danger") through a closed transfer and mixing system. Such a closed system, designed to protect workers, should meet the following requirements:

1. There should be no loss of the pesticide and maximum protection to the worker while transferring the chemicals from the shipping container to the sprayer or mixing tank.
2. There should be a way to measure the pesticide to insure proper dosage.
3. There must be a way to rinse the container and the transfer system so there is no contamination hazard.

Advantages of the use of a closed system could include: increased worker safety; use of uncomfortable protective clothing may no longer be necessary; complex medical supervision may be reduced to a simple initial baseline cholinesterase test; more accurate pesticide measurement.

If you are planning to build your own system, you should get further details from your County Agricultural commissioner or Agricultural Chemicals and Feed, Department of Food and Agriculture, 1220 N Street, Sacramento, CA 95814

"THERE'S A NEW KID ON THE BLOCK" by Jack Baker, H.V.Carter Co., Inc.

Looking at the 1977 roster of golf courses one is immediately impressed with the numbers of names of superintendents that should be joining the fellowship of the Golf Course Superintendents Association of Northern California.

May this associate member suggest that as each one hears of a "new kid on the block" that we extend them an invitation to attend the 'next meeting' and be given an application form and be asked to join? Possibly a committee of superintendents could be appointed that could assume the responsibility of making the initial contact and extend the right hand of fellowship. To be sure, we all want our organization to grow and in compliance with Section 3 of the Constitution and By Laws, to "disseminate the scientific and practical knowledge that will effect a more efficient and economical maintenance of golf courses improving and enhancing the prestige and efficiency of its members.
