GOLF COURSE

Smoking will be banned at a new municipal golf course opening in December on reclaimed land in Tokyo Bay, to prevent the ignition of methane gas emitted from garbage beneath the golf course, according to an announcement by the metropolitan government.

The new golf course is being constructed on top of what was once a garbage dump site, according to metropolitan government officials.

The new golf course has been under construction in Koto-ku since 1988, at a total cost of Y5.5 billion. The 54 hectare course, was designed by professional golfer Ayako Okamoto.

Knowing that as large number of golfers will seek to play at the conveniently located course, the metropolitan government has formulated a set of regulations in an attempt to see that all users receive the same treatment, the officials said.

For instance, if users seek to play Saturdays, Sundays or holidays, they are to send in a postcard during the first week of the month which falls two months before their projected date of play. The actual users are to be determined by lottery on the 20th of each month.

Those golfers hoping to play on weekdays are to book the use of the course one month prior to the date of play. An individual golfer or a group is not allowed to make two reservations at a time, according to the officials.

The user's fee is Y 14,000 on weekdays and Y 18,000 ($138) on Weekends and holidays. The fee, which is about half that charged by private golf courses, includes caddie charges.
