

APRIL 1995

ANNUAL ELECTION

Claremont Country Club was constructed in 1904 and was originally designed by James "Pop" Smith, the patriarch of a famous golfing family from Carnoustie, Scotland. Pop Smith had five sons: George (Claremont's first golf professional), MacDonald, Willie, Alex and James, Jr.; Alex, Willie and MacDonald either won or were runners-up in the U.S. Open Championship nine times.

The golf course was redesigned by Dr. Alister MacKensie in the 1920's. The extent of his work is not known because all records were lost in the clubhouse fire in 1927. The bunkers and their surrounds were rebuilt in course into one of contemporary design.

The golf course measures 5,469 yards, par is 68, rated at 67, with a slope of 119. The course will test your accuracy particularly on the back nine. Consistent with an older golf course, the greens are quite small, averaging about 4,000 square feet, requiring accurate iron play.

One of the highlights of play here at Claremont Country Club was the Oakland

Open held here in 1937, where Sam Snead scored his first tour victory.
