Handling customer complaints: get to the crux of the problem

by E.T. Wandtke

Unfortunately, relationships with your customers do not run smoothly all the time. As service providers, your attitude toward the customer's complaint can mean the difference between keeping a customer or losing several.

Here are some tips on how to deal with a customer complaint:

1. Discover what went wrong. This should be the time for fact-finding, not finger-pointing. During this discovery process, don't make any judgments or place any blame on the customer.

   It is also important to discover the problem. Often we listen to a complaint on the phone and assume the cause before we hear all the facts.

   Don't assume the cause of a complaint until all information is received and the customer's property is visited. Know 100 percent of the information before you decide on a course of action.

2. Discover who is responsible. This determination may take time, but it is very important to determine if an individual caused the complaint or if the cause of the complaint was outside the control of the employee or customer.

   Many customers do not understand that agronomic conditions may not be anticipated or solved until they are discovered. Only by receiving the customer's complaint do you know the condition exists.

   Explaining the causes of turf or ornamental problems requires care and understanding. The customer needs to understand what has happened on his or her property, how it came about, and what you are going to do about it.

   Use the telephone correctly—Customer service personnel who handle telephone complaints must know how to deal with complaints a little differently:

   1. Have customer service reps pretend it is their company. What would they do if they owned the company? How would they help the customer? How would they follow-up to be certain the customer has been satisfied?

   2. Give the customer time to explain the problem. Do not sound rushed. Apologize if you have to take another call. Then, when you get them back on the line, apologize for the delay and restate the problem.

   3. If you are not certain about what to do, ask!

   Customer service personnel should not make promises that the company might not be able to keep. They should tell the customer they do not have an immediate answer, and that the manager will return the call.

   Most important of all, make sure they give the customer time to explain the problem, and that they're efficient and professional.
