Include hardscaping in your master plan

Encourage customers to look beyond the green. Paint them a picture that includes edging and paving stone.

- Everybody talks about added value, and there is something you can do about it.
  Make 'hardscaping'—paving stones, edging, brick, or timber—part of the job.

How do you sell hardscaping? Start from square one and make it part of the initial sale, advises Daniel Zwier, ASLA, president of PermaLoc Corporation, Holland, Mich.

Zwier realizes, however, that the landscape contractor often has to juggle budget variables, and sometimes hardscaping is put on hold.

"The budget determines how far past the 'green' material you can go," he says, as does location or trends. In some parts of the country, for instance, irrigation is considered a more important, and necessary, add-on.

"It falls to the contractor, or design/build professional to place a high enough emphasis on edging," explains Zwier. "A lot of salesmanship goes into it."

Hardscaping—even an element as simple as aluminum edging, can be erased from the blueprint once people start shopping for price. As Zwier notes, "when shopping for price, it's the aesthetics that suffer."

The challenge, says Zwier, is to achieve a balance between the homeowner's goals as perceived by the contractor and the potential the site has to offer.

Zwier encourages landscape contractors to imagine and communicate to the customer "the full potential the site has to offer," from the edging to the paving stones, to the number of chairs or tables placed around the site. Avoid the "I can do it for less" debate.

"Paint the picture for them," says Zwier, to help customers see what you see in a landscape."

If you know they're eventually going to spend the money on edging, but can afford to buy it now, encourage them to act sooner rather than later.

This month's LM Reports is meant to provide you with the names of some of the companies that provide edging or paving materials to the professional landscape contractor/specifier.
