BELTSVILLE, MD — The tornado that killed two University of Maryland students in nearby College Park, MD, Sept. 24, also caused an estimated $41 million damage to the government's largest agricultural research facility here. The National Turfgrass Evaluation Program is headquartered at the station, but escaped damage.

Landscape pros reassess business after attack
BY JASON STAHL & SUSAN G. PORTER

It was only this summer that landscape professionals reported 10% to 30% growth to Landscape Management and a continued surge of business that had most of them backlogged.

Last month's attack on America no doubt forced them to reassess their business prospects. The effects of a sagging economy they said would take awhile to reach them might reach them more quickly.

"I find myself being more guarded with spending and projections," says Bruce Allentuck, owner, Allentuck Landscaping, Gaithersburg, MD. "We were considering buying a property but now I'm not going to do it."

Allentuck says his company may not be hired to do as many big projects as before, but insists his customers will not start mowing their own lawns. "And since most people will be canceling their vacations, maybe they'll put that money toward landscaping."

"We're still shell shocked," says Bill Hoopes, director of training and development at Scotts Lawn Service, Marysville, OH. "While we've moved from 'exuberance' to 'cautious optimism,' we're still growing strongly. However, he said, "it makes sense to have contingency plans in place."

STRONG WORDS
"The work we do and spaces we create are so very versatile. They function in times of joy and in times of sorrow. They allow us to come together in extremely emotional times. They allow us to connect with nature and feel that we are connected to a greater spirit beyond. I feel so very proud of what we do. The examples of our work are serving to help in the recovery and healing process this past week. It is a reaffirmation of how important a role landscape architecture plays in creating a sense of community and in strengthening society."

"When the attack happened, we were in the middle of our budgeting process. Everyone's taking a new look now and toning down their goals, and rightfully so."

"The economy was already under lots of pressure before the attack, but we thought it was okay because it wasn't affecting our markets," says Rick Randall, president of RBI Companies, Littleton, CO. "But with this disaster we're really taking another look. We're increasing our marketing because we think they'll be less work out there for the same amount of contractors."

Randall adds, "When the attack happened, we were in the middle of our budgeting process. Everyone's taking a new look now and toning down their goals, and rightfully so."

New market pressures

"All segments of our industry will be affected, but not equally," predicts George Gaumer, vice president of commercial grounds management, The Davey Tree Expert Co., Kent, OH. "I expect construction-related segments to be the earliest and most noticeably. Second, the more discretionary the service, the earlier it will be affected. These effects will be felt similarly across both commercial and residential markets."

While some locations may feel more effects than others, the general unease in the marketplace has savvy landscape professionals planning new strategies for 2002, and even the end of 2001.

"Our market (DC-area) has not experienced the slowdown other parts of the country have experienced," says Tom Davis, president of Bozzuto Landscape, Laurel, MD. "But we are always looking for new opportunities and just acquired a pressure washing company as an add-on service line. It's two months old and doing very well."

Ed McGuire, president of The Lawn Co., S. Dennis, MA, has seen past downturns in the Green Industry and adds, "History tells me the residential customer base will be stable while the commercial business is less stable."

4 ways to make your operation stronger

"The bad news," says Don Willig, president of Consortium Management Services, Cincinnati, OH, is that things will never be the same as the "good old days." What does this mean right now for Green Industry operations? He says that companies cannot operate as loosely as they have in the past, that prices will get more competitive, that every company will have to be more efficient and that labor costs may increase as a result of both economic pressures and war efforts. There may also be fallout with current immigration programs that will limit available workers.

Willig sees plenty of opportunities right now, though. "The good news is that for the few who prepare for the future, they will reap good benefits for their efforts," he says. "They should follow these four rules:

1. Evaluate your business and run it by the numbers,
2. Follow common sense and don't wait to act,
3. Remain active in your communities, especially now,
4. Stay the course and continue to focus on building business.

"Believe and do not fear!" Willig adds.

Run it by the numbers

"Do not take more clients on than you have the ability to develop relationships with," says Troy Hall, owner of Halls Horticulture Design Inc., Charlotte, NC. "We have been anticipating the economic changes for about a year now. We set out to target the specific clients we work with and had to trim the fat in the way of excess labor, vendors, equipment, vehicles, etc."

McGuire also anticipated a slowdown and recommends classic strategy for a downturn: "When the economy is stagnant...the biggest challenges anybody in business has to learn is controlling expenses. We have been in a conservative mode since spring. Going ahead, we will be concentrating on gaining and retaining customers, operating more efficiently and controlling expenses."

For Ed Wandtke, though, previous downturns offer solutions to current problems. This Columbus, OH-based consultant says there are reasons to be positive on future business, as long as you're able to adapt quickly, operate profitably and seek new opportunities. "Leaders plan and execute," he adds, "while employees or weak owners follow."
