The new PRODIGY™ snowplow features an ingenious patented mechanical wing design that automatically positions its wings to deliver maximum plowing efficiency. Whether in straight-ahead scoop mode or angled for windrowing, it delivers multi-position winged plow productivity in a unit that’s as easy to operate as a straight-blade.

Also available for skid-steer loaders.

INTRODUCING

PRODIGY™

Follow Us: More jobs. Done faster. | westernplows.com
There’s been much written about the importance of developing a distinct company culture. Like many of you, for the first 15 years we were in business, we didn’t have the time or the energy to think about our culture, let alone develop a formalized mission or values statement. We were just operating an everyday business, keeping our customers and employees on board and trying to succeed and be profitable.

It was only after we achieved a certain level of success, with about 70 employees and geographic expansion, that we started to figure out we needed to develop consistency. We learned we had to further define what made us Ruppert and develop scalability around those ideas to ensure others within our expanding organization understood the principles we believe are important to our success. It was then the term “culture” popped up in our vocabulary for the first time. We started to look closely at what made us unique and what beliefs set us apart from our competition to help us continue to grow and succeed.

As with most organizations, no matter the market or industry segment, our key values centered around quality, customer service, employees and profitability. We carved out 12 core values that are important to our success and supported our culture. Once you determine your beliefs and document them (about 5 percent of the exercise), the real work can begin (the other 95 percent of the equation), which is getting your employees to understand those values, believe in them, adopt them and make them their own. Here are the steps you can take to link company values to outcomes:

Start from the top down. As a manager or company owner, it’s important to lead by example and live by the company values daily. That means adhering to the same standards you expect from others within our expanding organization understood the principles we believe are important to our success. It was then the term “culture” popped up in our vocabulary for the first time. We started to look closely at what made us unique and what beliefs set us apart from our competition to help us continue to grow and succeed.

As with most organizations, no matter the market or industry segment, our key values centered around quality, customer service,
Wherever your business takes you, we’re there to help.

At Progressive Commercial Auto, we know your business depends on your vehicle. For over 40 years, we’ve been offering Commercial Auto insurance designed specifically for small business owners. And with 24/7 live support and expert claims representatives, we get you back on the road fast. On the road with you. Now that’s Progressive.
your employees, such as maintaining a certain work schedule, wearing the company uniform or driving a company vehicle. One of the best ways to reinforce your expectations is to set the standard by your actions so others can model the behavior.

Structure your values with policy. When you get busy, even your best-laid plans fall by the wayside. You meant to call your mom or planned to schedule a lunch meeting with a vendor to discuss a project. Often, the items on our to-do list that aren’t urgent become less of a priority when schedules become busy.

One way to ensure important tasks are receiving the attention they deserve is to build structure around them. If you say your people are your most important strength, be sure your policies reflect that. How will you ensure your employees are successful, knowledgeable and happy? Some examples include structuring training programs and guidelines for when you expect them to happen or regularly scheduling employee-appreciation events, which can be as simple as a lunch or happy hour after work to something more elaborate like an awards banquet or whitewater rafting trip. If you set goals and policies to ensure you’ll take the time to follow through, you’re more likely to succeed.

Measure what you expect. As you try to tie your values to your organization more closely, measure and document important areas to provide a point of comparison because it will be more clear where your successes and challenges lie. Putting numbers around anything that’s essential to success might help underscore its importance. If providing excellent customer service is high on a company’s value list, then performing yearly customer surveys might enable a company to better understand what’s going well and what isn’t. If a company’s principles center around people development and training, it’s valuable to track if new employees are receiving their orientation on their first day on the job and existing employees are receiving their evaluations in a timely manner. Putting employees first also might be measured through turnover rates or employee job satisfaction surveys.

Reward what’s working. You might have heard the adage, “You can catch more flies with honey than with vinegar.” That saying has implications in almost all areas of life, including the workplace. While it’s important to be looking for areas where someone can be coached for improvement, it’s just as important, if not more so, to recognize someone... for what they’re doing well. Recognition can be as informal as saying thank you with a quick pat on the back, taking employees out to lunch to congratulate them for a good job, presenting a formal award to them at an awards banquet or giving them a bonus.

If an organization values creating a safe work environment, incentivize that behavior by rewarding employees who are promoting hazard awareness or the team or branch that has consistently demonstrated their commitment to the company’s safety culture through compliance or achieving the lowest incident rates. If an organization values employee longevity, do something special to acknowledge significant company anniversaries. Consider giving a monetary reward or hosting a celebration that recognizes significant achievements in an area of importance.

As you look for ways to differentiate your company from the competition and stand out as the best choice for customers and employees, develop a set of values and ethics that will serve as a guide. By practicing the values from the top-down and adding structure, measurement and evaluation into the mix, along with a willingness to look at the process and ask difficult questions, you might be more likely to succeed. With the essential ingredients covered, there’s a better chance your employees will be infused with principles you believe are crucial to your company’s long-term success.

Ruppert is CEO of Laytonsville, Md.-based Ruppert Landscape. Reach him at info@ruppertcompanies.com.

WHO’S IN CHARGE OF YOUR FLEET?

A fleet manager PURCHASES all vehicles, trucks, and equipment, SCHEDULES maintenance, FOLLOWS the latest technology trends and software, MAINTAINS the fleet budget, IMPLEMENTS safety standards, and PROVIDES technical support for your operation.

Do these responsibilities fall onto you or one of your employees?

NAFA Fleet Management Association offers fleet solutions for landscaping and lawn care companies, no matter what size trucks or vehicles you have!

Gain access to a community of more than 3,000 fleet professionals that can share their expertise and best practices. Advance your company and become an NAFA Member!

To more effectively manage your fleet operations, connect with NAFA!

Join NAFA Today!
www.nafa.org/join
If your company is transitioning in size or you’re at a crossroads that’s holding up growth, there are steps and actions you can take to gain traction. Here are some things you can do to nurture your leadership energy and your need for the right team.

Q: I’ve reached $6 million and need to grow, but I’m stuck and can’t build a team because of turnover. How do I improve my hiring practices to keep people longer? Turnover can set back growth plans, cause contract losses and impact morale, so it’s important to have a pipeline of people ready and able to step up.

If you’ve reached $6 million you have done a lot right. It’s not common, however, to reach this level in a stressful environment. The sooner you have a people development plan the better. You must identify how you will staff and train for growth.

Q: I need to find good people, but I’m spending a fortune on ads and getting poor results. What can I do? Filling empty positions can cost a lot. While headhunters can be a solution for key positions, in general recruiters are expensive and the time it takes to evaluate and select a suitable candidate can be a disadvantage.

Advertising now includes using online tools and social media, including Facebook, LinkedIn, Craigslist and Monster or CareerBuilder. These popular online databases can be effective but come with uneven results.

The best solution is to have a system in place for proactively identifying high-potential people at all levels and promote from within whenever possible.

Q: I hire promising college grads, invest in training them and they stay for a year or so and then leave. What can I do? The career potential in our industry is really good, but college graduates are only part of a long-term solution. There are very good manager-potential people who have little or no college education, so the key is to hire for potential and make a long-term commitment for people development.

In small, entrepreneurial companies, some employees emerge as leaders or show intuitive or inspirational qualities in spite of the fact nothing has been done to develop their leadership skills. It takes time. The larger your company gets, the less time you have. You can’t wait for your future leaders to develop independently; you must encourage leadership through a culture that supports your commitment to it.

Q: What’s the best way to train people internally so I can promote them? For a career training and development program to work effectively, you need a company culture that supports your commitment to it.
They say money talks, and...

As legal tender, I know quite a bit about where money goes. For instance, billions of dollars have gone straight into the pockets of PermaGreen owners over the last 15 years. That’s because PermaGreen’s come closest to the money making goal of one machine, all properties, every day... and that’s no B.S. (walking or otherwise)!

Just as importantly, you’ll trust your people to drive the 2014 Triumph with its improved ExtraEasy power steering, low center of gravity, and numerous intuitive features, all covered by our extended 15-month warranty (including engine and transaxle corrosion coverage) and 60-day 100% buyback guarantee!

I love talking about money with you, and the money making experts at PermaGreen can get us together a lot more often! Call today, because one test drive is worth a thousand words.

— Franklin

visit us online for a chance to win your own triumph
permagreen
800.346.2001 permagreen.com
nurtures talent and promotes people based on merit. Your employees must know opportunities are there for them. If they gain new skills and take on more responsibility they can get promoted. Your employees need to know “training their replacement” is what will make them eligible to move up.

If your employees know you’re committed, they’ll be your most effective cheerleaders and help you promote it. Teach them how to coach and mentor their subordinates, especially high-potential and high-performing employees. Put your senior managers in charge of this initiative and make sure promoting from within is reinforced regularly.

Q. How do I build a mentoring culture?
A. A coaching and mentoring culture will better meet the demands for improved employee performance. But it takes time to grow and evolve.

Tie coaching outcomes to your strategy for success and make it a priority. Include measurements for accountability, and a broad range of intangible benefits such as increased employee engagement, job satisfaction, morale, teamwork and professional growth.

Assign a coach to promotable employees to see they get the right exposure of training and experience to ensure they are prepared when promotional opportunities arise.

For example, field supervisors in collaboration with crew leaders could identify crew personnel who show potential as crew leaders. Set up a plan for these potential crew leaders to ensure they get the experience they need to move up. Ultimately, this approach could work for all positions.

Also, remember to “coach during the game.” Don’t fall into the trap of waiting to coach employees until review time.

Q. I’m considering recruiting at our local schools. What’s the best way to get started?

Companies that have the most success in college recruiting brand their organization on campus through existing connections. They establish a relationship with key faculty members who are influential in guiding students on their careers after college and utilize employees who are alumni of the targeted schools to help recruit other students. They also seek opportunities to speak or lecture to classes in support of the curriculum.

While cultivating your relationship with the schools, don’t forget to reach out within your company. Develop internal plans to fast-track graduates to positions of incremental responsibility.

For interns, you cannot put them out in the field pulling weeds and mowing grass without a plan that gets them some varied experience. Most companies that do this well set up an eight- to 12-week plan to rotate interns through different jobs in the company, including sales and some exposure to account management so they can see what they can aspire to do as a graduate.

Q. How do I integrate newly hired external talent with my company’s existing leadership?

Going outside to find and hire talent is an opportunity to balance the strength of your current managerial team and upgrade your company’s leadership pool.

Companies with a talent mindset focus their attention on the individual’s leadership capability and potential for professional growth. They hire from the outside using the same criteria for competencies they use internally.

Managers in a talent mindset company are expected to participate in identifying, attracting, developing and retaining future talent. It’s also an important factor in the manager’s own advancement.

Encourage your managers to meet competitors’ employees at bid walks, homeowners association board meetings, supplier events and seminars. They should look for people who are results oriented and who are capable of stretch assignments or fast-tracking.

This may sound contrary to having a culture that promotes from within and there is a fine balance here. First, it’s unlikely you will end up with a flood of talent through your employees, but over time you will have them develop relationships and networks so when there’s a need they can reach out to someone who they think might be a strategic hire.

If you develop a culture where your employees see opportunities and are treated well, they will want to bring on other talented people they know to benefit the pipeline. In a perfect world, they might even find their own replacement when they get promoted.

Wilson, a consultant with the Wilson-Oyler Group, is a 30-year industry veteran and a Landscape Management columnist. Reach him at bwilson@wilson-oyler.com.
First the neighbors will be jealous. Then they’ll give you a call.

Our best-in-class products combined with the WinField Insights™ Tech Kit and WinField™ Academy classes can help you look deeper and plan smarter.
Q: HOW DO I MOTIVATE MY STAFF?

A: Every year, finding and keeping good staff is one of the biggest problems for landscape contractors. With industry prices stagnant and even deflating in some areas, it’s never been more important to get maximum results out of your most important resource—your people.

THE PROBLEM

Our industry faces significant labor challenges. Our average wages are less than other trades, and we don’t attract enough exceptional, young talent out of schools. Most companies are small businesses working without a plan, with limited opportunities for advancement and no formalized training. Many can only guarantee steady work for eight months a year. The work is hot, cold, wet and dirty. It’s no wonder it’s difficult to find people who want to commit their futures to our industry.

But you have a choice: Join the tens of thousands of other companies that play victim to labor problems or seize the opportunity to differentiate yourself. The labor problem, in fact, can be an extremely powerful competitive advantage.

BUILDING A DOOR OF OPPORTUNITY

During performance reviews for my company, it became obvious we lacked a system for employees to envision how they fit in. I find reviews are more positive when criticism is framed as “this is what you need to be doing to get to the next level” rather than “this is what your weaknesses are.” But right after our review process came the questions: “When will I be re-evaluated?” “What else do I need to do?” “How can I move to a hardscape crew?” “Where can I go to get that training?”

Employees were motivated to move up, but there was no system in place to guide them, and they weren’t about to make it up themselves. So we set the following system in place to define the opportunities available to staff and the criteria required to move up the ladder. There are five steps to implementing the system.

1 Define the roles.
Identify different positions in your company as an opportunity tree. Even if you haven’t had formal positions before, draw out what they’d look like. If they’re not clear to you, imagine how your staff feels about future opportunities with your company. Make it look like a flowchart or an organizational chart. Use this for new and existing hires to illustrate the opportunities.

2 Establish pay scales.
We define fixed wage floors and ceilings at each position. Ceilings motivate development. An A-level laborer will bump up against a wage ceiling eventually. To earn another raise, he needs to develop himself into a bigger role. Incentive systems based on time served breed overpaid, underperforming employees.

To download sample advancement opportunity criteria or view a video about effective employee bonus systems, visit the Web Extras section at LandscapeManagement.net.