Landscape industry professionals are feeling positive. Despite challenges, the industry is out front of other small businesses when it comes to optimism.
When you work hard all day taming the tough terrain, you need a machine that works just as hard. You need a Gravely Commercial Mower. With a full product offering from zero-turn mowers to 21-inch walk behinds, Gravely is built to take on the toughest jobs. And when your livelihood depends on getting the work done – downtime is not an option. That is why Gravely Commercial mowers are built to dominate the landscape.
Every recession teaches us familiar lessons, and the past few years were no exception. As business owners, we are again smarter for having gone through the last economic dip. One advantage of the uncertain economy is that it forced us to focus—whether we liked it or not. If you are like me, you learned to monitor your business more closely, manage your cash and even reassess your profit structure. These are worthwhile lessons that all business owners need to learn, even if we don’t fully appreciate them at the time.

As the economy starts to show signs of picking up, let’s stay steadfast in the lessons we’ve learned. There are still plenty of challenges to keep us motivated. Fuel prices, rising taxes and unpredictable health care costs make all of us wary. But I’ve always believed you can find opportunity in any kind of economy. My great-grandfather started our family business in 1933 in the midst of the Great Depression. He had to set his priorities, stay focused and ignore the doom-and-gloom mindset that surrounded him at that time. But with a small loan borrowed against his life insurance policy, he slowly and steadily grew a business that would go on to sustain three more generations of employees.

Certainly, all of our success hinges on the weather to a certain extent, but there are many positive indicators that show we are moving in the right direction as an industry. The housing market is in recovery, consumer confidence is slowly improving and leading indicators point to a growing economy. As you go into the next year, remember to keep a clear focus on profitable growth. Selling short of your value is not a viable business model. It will only catch up with you in the near future and create a cycle of low price, low value that is hard to break. And, more importantly, it will hurt the entire Green Industry in the long run.

We, as an industry, need to find new opportunities to create value for our customers—even if it means continually finding more creative ways to do so. The year ahead has all the positive signs of providing an environment for profitable growth. The world of communications technology should provide a ripe opportunity for you to stay even closer to your customers seeking your professional advice and service.

Use these opportunities and the lessons of the last few years to come out of the gate strong, healthy and reenergized for your most successful year yet.
Optimism among landscape professionals about the state of the Green Industry is better than expected this year, despite some uncertainty.

When asked for last year’s Landscape Management Industry Pulse report, “What’s your 2013 business outlook?”, 69 percent of respondents said they were very or somewhat optimistic about the coming year. When asked the same question about current business conditions for this year’s report, 85 percent of respondents indicated they are very or somewhat optimistic—a 16-point jump (see “Optimism Index” on opposite page).

As for their feelings about next year? Four-fifths of them are very or somewhat optimistic about 2014. Landscape companies grew revenue an average of 14 percent from 2011 to 2012 and are expecting another year with 14 percent growth for 2013.

Landscape industry optimism is ahead of the curve when compared to overall small business optimism. The National Federation of Independent Business releases a monthly index of small business optimism, and the 2013 average is 91.9, well below the average reading of 100.

Consultant Bruce Wilson of the Wilson-Oyler Group characterizes Green Industry sentiment as “guardedly optimistic.”

“The most contractors are having what they would consider a good year,” he says. It’s not all good news, though. “They still have Obamacare looming in their future, which is going to cost everybody a lot of money. They’re hopeful something positive will come out of the immigration reform movement right now, but they’re not sure.”

Landscape industry professionals are feeling positive. Despite challenges, the industry is out front of other small businesses when it comes to optimism.
More than a feeling

“T’m seeing it come back,” says Tom Canete, owner of Canete Landscape and Canete Snow Management in Wayne, N.J. “This year has been better than last year and last year was better than the year before. I see it progressively getting better.” For 2014, Canete is anticipating even more improvement.

“You gotta think positive,” he says. His firm is planning for about a 20 percent increase on the landscape side and to double its snow business, having landed a major contract—snow removal of MetLife Stadium, home of the New York Giants, the New York Jets and host of the Super Bowl XLVIII in February. He didn’t disclose his revenue, but says he employs about 75 on the landscape side and, in the past, as many as 300 on the snow side. He’s in the throes of hiring 400 additional snow personnel to staff MetLife Stadium alone.

Dan Dahlkemper is another landscape contractor on the upswing; 2013 is on track to be his company’s best year out of the last five—with a record high 42 employees.

“We’ve just had a great project mix,” says the owner of Dahlkemper Landscape Architects & Contractors in Erie, Pa., a $3.5 million design/build and maintenance firm. “We plan on continuing to grow at a measured pace.”

The company looks to grow about 10 percent per year. Some of next year’s growth will come from servicing athletic fields, which is part of the company’s strategic plan. Stream and lake bank stabilization are other services Dahlkemper is eyeing.

A fair price

Value is one area where many landscape professionals report clients are coming around, finally, after the price-driven mentality of the recession.

Andrew Ziehler is one of those. He says customers are tired of receiving low-quality service for a lower cost, and those dissatisfied customers are turning to his firm for quality service.

“Spending is picking up with customers,” says the owner of the $1.2 million lawn care and maintenance firm. “It’s not back to where it was, but there’s definitely positive movement.”

Grant & Power Landscaping, a $7 million design/build, maintenance and snow removal firm in West Chicago, Ill., is seeing a similar trend.

Methodology

For the 2013 Industry Pulse report, Landscape Management surveyed subscribers online in July and August, garnering 356 complete responses. Respondents were offered the chance to win one of three $100 gift cards as an incentive. We assume a +/- 5 percent margin of error. Unless otherwise noted, all charts and figures in this report come from this survey.
“People are looking for quality products again,” says Jan-Gerrit Bouwman, a partner. He says clients appear “very confident about the economy.” Plus, the recession benefited Grant & Power by weeding out weaker companies that drove down prices in the market. He says the economy is better but not back to where it was and conditions have been improving since 2009.

In Ohio, Todd Pugh agrees customers are coming around to understanding value versus price.

“The market is still very cost driven, but customers have been burned by the low-end provider,” says the CEO of Todd’s Enviroscapes in Louisville, Ohio. “So there’s room for the higher-end provider. Right now it’s a matter of the company that can deliver the best service and quality for a fair price will succeed.”

Enviroscapes will do about $11.5 million in revenue in 2013 and Pugh expects to grow 15 percent to 17 percent next year. The company grew nearly 35 percent over 2012—15 percent of which came from the acquisition of a smaller competitor. Next year, the growth will be organic, and Pugh says it will come naturally.

“If you focus on your work and being the best at what you do, there’s 15 percent growth in any market,” he says. “If you’re not the best at what you do, you’re just going to be on a treadmill because you’ll be losing customers instead of maintaining them.

“For us, if we don’t grow but we retain 100 percent of our customers, that’s OK,” he says. “But that’s not going to happen if you have momentum behind you and you focus on the client. They’re going to refer you for 10 percent to 15 percent growth.”

East of the Rockies, 10 states had one of their 10 wettest year-to-date periods.

The cool, wet year is costing Andrew Ziehler, owner of Ziehler Lawn & Tree Care in Centerville, Ohio, more on labor.

“We’re slightly over budget on some of our hours because the grass has grown so well,” he says, adding the good growing conditions have made weeds more difficult to control.

California, Idaho, Nevada and Oregon had top 10 dry year-to-date periods. California’s precipitation total of 4.58 inches was record low for the seven-month period at nearly 10 inches below average.

Texas, too, has been dry, and that presents both challenges and opportunities for TechScape, a full-service firm in Richardson, Texas.

“Almost every city in the North Dallas area is under drought restrictions,” says Bram Franklin, residential design/build and garden manager supervisor, adding some cities allow residents to water only once a week. However, these conditions present advantages, such as an increase in mulch sales, more drip irrigation installations and a push for smart controller installations. The company also has been doing more irrigation system audits.

As for temperature, the year-to-date contiguous U.S. average of 51.8 F was 0.5 F above the 20th century average. Above-average temperatures were observed in the West and Northeast, where California, New Hampshire and Vermont had one of their top 10 warmest year-to-date periods. Below-average temperatures stretched from the Northern Plains to the Southeast.

Getting the word out

Many companies, though, aren’t comfortable relying on referrals alone. In fact, Wilson expects companies to boost marketing budgets now that they’re in growth mode, after reeling in costs during the recession years.

“I’m seeing a little more interest in marketing, since companies really cut back on it the last few years,” he says. “They’re starting to invest in marketing and other social media initiatives.”

Jeff Bowen, owner of Images of Green, a full-service firm in Stuart, Fla., plans to increase marketing efforts next year, despite relying only on word of mouth for his 18 years in business. His company does about $1.8 million in annual revenue, and he would like to grow it to around $4 million to $5 million in size. He’s also engaged a consulting firm to help with those efforts.

On the other hand, Grant & Power Landscaping is reducing its marketing budget in favor of a more direct sales approach. The company used to do radio advertising but has switched to TV this year, says Bou-wan, noting TV is cheaper than radio. The company is also reducing print magazine advertising and home show expenditures.

Bill Banford, president of The Sharper Cut in Upper Marlboro, Md., spent more than intended marketing this year—about $45,000 versus the $37,000 he budgeted. That may be part of the reason the company is on track for about $2 million in annual revenue in 2013—an 80 percent increase over 2012.
The primarily residential design/build company revamped its social media presence and began using Angie’s List, which it plans to continue next year.

Green Industry buyers and sellers aren’t making many moves just yet.

By SARAH PFLEDDERER / Associate Editor

The mergers and acquisitions (M&A) market has been the equivalent of an ever-long chess game for the Green Industry in 2013. Buyers and sellers are simply strategizing and waiting to make a move before yearend—or in some circumstances make no move at all.

For this reason, M&A activity has been relatively low, consultants say, but they caution to “stay tuned” for an upsweep in activity the remainder of the year and trickling into the next.

Jeff Harkness, partner with the 3PG Group, credited looming costs of Obamacare, a rise in workers’ comp rates and immigration concerns that could affect the H-2B guest-worker visa program as reasons for companies moving at a sluggish pace on transactions.

“We’re not seeing companies or acquisition targets that have fantastic earning numbers,” he says. “We’re still not in an environment where we can go charge more to the customer.”

Harkness says it’s small- to medium-sized companies that have been the most active this year.

Landscapes USA, for instance, acquired Peach Tree Landscapes, based in Nashville, Tenn., in June for an undisclosed sum. The company has completed an acquisition every year in the last four years, accruing seven locations.

“They’re certainly becoming more visible, and it wouldn’t surprise me if they did more deals,” says Ron Edmonds, president of the Principium Group. He adds it seems the company’s growth has been “intentionally kept below the radar screen.”

The strategists

Other companies’ growth schemes, however, are making headlines.

Leonard Green & Partners is preparing for a $1.5 billion sale of The Brickman Group, Reuters reported in mid-August. The Los Angeles-based private equity firm acquired a majority stake in Gaithersburg, Md.-based Brickman in 2007.

“It’s conceivable that a transaction could get done by the end of the year, but that would be very quick,” Edmonds says. “A lot of it depends on who is interested.”

Edmonds points to private equity firms and large facility service companies with smaller landscape divisions as prospective buyers.

Those types of companies, he says, have been most active in strategizing this year.

Other major Green Industry players ValleyCrest Landscape Cos., based in Calabasas, Calif., and Memphis, Tenn.-based TruGreen have been directing their attention toward internal restructuring instead of expansion, consultants say. Meanwhile, Scotts Lawn-Service, based in Marysville, Ohio, has indicated it’s looking for acquisition targets and has been buying back well performing franchise locations, Landscape Management reported in September.

Brian Corbett, managing partner at CCG Advisors, says there are a number of private equity groups with
