

A Lark in standing corne had hatcht a brood,
Which thee employes when they pers'd theyr foode,
To gayne advisos when y^e full ear'd heape
The sickle should as its due victime reape
When trembling they told her y^e enling' morne.
The neighbours joyne to fell y^e owners corne.

Neighbours & friends are backwards, who intends

Feare not said thee those will not yett approach,
Then a wilde noyse, his friends will come they broach
Dread not saye thee y^e incursions of his friends,
The owner lastly they asert, intends,
Loyn'd with his some, next mornes to reape y^e feild.
Nay then 'tis time sayd thee our nest to yeild.

T^h effect things well must make his hands his friends.

F A B. VI. De alandâ, & pullis ejus.

A Landâ positos in segete pullos monet, ut dum ipsa abest diligenter attendant prætereuntium sermones de messe; Redit à pastu mater, pulli anxii narrant, dominum agri operam illam mandasse vicinis; Respondet, nihil esse periculi, Item, alio die, trepidi aiunt, rogatos ad metendum esse amicos; Jubet iterum illa ut sint securi; Tertio ut audivit ipsum Dominum cum filio statuisse, postremo mane, cum falce messem intrare; Jam inquit est tempus ut fugiamus, Dominum enim agri timeo, quia probè scio, quod illi Res cordi est.

MORALE.

Quisque quoad potest animum ad id advertat quod suæ parti, & causæ privat potissimum prodesse, si quid rectè curatum velis, alteri ne mandes, sed cures ipse.
