Life Stress Scale

This widely reprinted index lists 43 stressful life events and the value of each in "stress units." Use the blank lines between items to add your own life-stress events, and assign each an appropriate stress unit value by comparing it to the events ranked in the chart.

To use the Life Stress Scale, check the events which have happened to you within the last year. Then add up your total number of stress units.

Holmes and Rahe, who developed this scale, found that a score of 150 gives you a 50-50 chance of developing an illness. A score of more than 300 gives you a 90-percent chance.
