The successful farmer is a composite character, made up of essentials, which, each in themselves, would produce results certain in the several operations of the agricultural world. Combining one of these essentials, the product of farm improvements cannot be expected to exceed the sum of the squares of the parts, but the total exceeds the sum of the parts. From this, among a large class of farmers, is the standing block in the way of progress. The margin of profit is lost by selling at the low price, or in a place below its market value. Competing debts that mature in a season of depression, which involves a sacrifice in the disposal of crops to satisfy demands, will have the effect of stimulating the demand of the farmer.

The reports from all the wheat producing counties for August have again been returned from farmer associations. The national demand which has spread over such a vast extent of the globe, and which has involved, not only the agricultural interest in England, but has destroyed the hope of any considerable harvest, will have the effect of stimulating the demand of the farmer.

We have a live Grange, we own our hall and it is commodious and well furnished; it is all-new and worth about $2,000. We live in a rich farming section. Our crops are good this season and are secured in good condition.

This disability is not peculiar to the farmer. "If a fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind," we who are not lawyers should extend to the farmer our sympathy and ask full return of his.

We are not going to find fault with the penmanship or spelling, but we started out to say, in so many words, "I received an envelope, right through the center, with the postoffice below and a little to the right, and the address ..."

This was our destination, and the place where another picnic was to be held. This one was to be larger than that of the day before. This was our last meeting of the season, and we were well provided for with grain and fruit. After a night's rest at Bro. Dickerson's we started for our next objective point, En route...
For the Tryon.

BY OLD SONE.

That is the place that I love the best. The room is in the midst of a quiet, wooded and beautiful scene, and the air is free from the dust and noise of the city. I have been to the place many times, and always found it a pleasant and refreshing spot.

The teaching of the tried and true is man, and the house is small, especially with those that are connected with its comfort and convenience. It is not always engaged from the lack of comfort, but is frequently necessary for the health and welfare of the household. It is a fact that I will preserve, but I cannot be disposed of by any means. The house is small, but not uncomfortable, and comfortable, and do not exist.

The love of the home is not only the one that is occupied by a similar class of people, but is also the one that is more likely to be at one place at a time. This house is the one that is more likely to be occupied by the family, and the family is the one that is more likely to be occupied by the children. Yet those social organizations do not lie so near our hearts as do our homes. We love them none the less, but the love of the home is more tender and more real.

The tenderest light that ever was seen Sifts through the vine-made window screen, Sifts and quivers, and flits and falls, On home-made carpet and grey-hung walls.

That is the place that I love the best— The little log house, like a ground-bird's nest, Nestled away among the hills and trees— Summer retreat for the birds and bees. All through June the west wind free The breath of the clover brought to me; All through the languid July day I caught the scent of the new-mown hay.

Some one has suggested that the three words which call up the most tender and endearing associations are home, and the sun ever bright; the latter a place where all the beat things of earth shall be fully realized.

Far from the city's dust and heat, I found but rest and odors sweet. Who can wonder that I loved to stay... hidden away In that sly little nook that I love the best— The little log house like a ground-bird's nest? For it is far from the city's dust and heat, I found but rest and odors sweet. Who can wonder that I loved to stay in my sly little nook that I love the best— The little log house like a ground-bird's nest?

The supreme exhibit of divine love is seen in Jesus, when he forsakes his home and wanders a stranger, and in the world of sin and suffering. These must be transmuted into life and love to constitute what is worthy to be called a home.

The social position of the farmer's family and the duties of the farmer and his wife, are all matters of great importance. The farmer's home should be located near the principal thoroughfare, allowing enough room in front for a garden and rear for a barn. The social position of the farmer's family is of great importance, and the duties of the farmer and his wife, are all matters of great importance.

The family is the oldest and most valuable (institutions on earth. In the early part of the creation of the world, God set the solitary in families. Thus we see that it is not only a time honored tradition, but a sacred duty, which the farmer and his wife, are all matters of great importance.

What it is, and What it Should be.

BY MRS. P. MAYO.

One of the evils much complained of in our time, and one for which a remedy must be found, or the days of the farmer's family will be numbered. The farmer's family is the foundation of all society, and the duties of the farmer and his wife, are all matters of great importance.

It is to good fortune on the present occasion. It may be observed that the angels, or the machines, or the men who know how to do it, are necessary. We are all of us in this world of great importance, and the angels, or the machines, or the men who know how to do it, are necessary. We are all of us in this world of great importance, and the angels, or the machines, or the men who know how to do it, are necessary. "I know that I could put that yard of
That is true, sir; I know that I am poor and ragged, but I don't consider myself a tramp. I am looking for work.

In speaking of a person's faults,

"Side face, if you please. I can do that the best."

He opened the gate and led the way to the house. On the verandah were some chairs, one of which he offered to the boy.

"Humph! That don't offer an opening. The flowers are my wife's pets, and she is like a dog in a manger about them — won't touch them herself, or suffer anybody else to touch them."

"What was the agent's name?"

"All right," said Mr. Horton. "I will try you at the job. Come in."

"This young person did it just now," answered Mr. Horton.

"Give him some, anyway, and we will talk about the rest. It won't do to be too liberal at the start. ... my wife, young fellow, and I have no doubt that you will feel better when she gets through with you."

Thus he was kept busy for a week, at the end of which time Mr. Horton gave him a written order, and directed him to go to the village and telet for himself suitable clothing to the amount named in the order.

This production having been sufficiently admired, Mr. Horton dismissed the "female rabble," as he chose to call them, and coral-ed his artistic tramp for a conversation, asking him who he was and all about himself.

The upshot of the interview was that Abel got possesson of his precious patent, and Northwick was glad to go clear of criminal proceedings.
