Communications.

J. T. Cobb—The Fourth of July is fast approaching, and it is intended to celebrate the event at Canton, in the town of Binghamton, on Monday next. The public are cordially invited to be present and join, in the discussion, the subject of the day. We beseech the cultivation of the taste for useful and inquisitive reading.

The larger class of our readers have made the Fourth of July a subject of thought and careful consideration, for the purpose of providing something for the occasion. They have been original with you, for I have Veblen's "Theory of the Leisure Class" has the aspect of a book which may be expected to have an influence far reaching upon the sphere of public thought and action. It is the first work of Mr. Veblen's that we have read, and it is surprising at first impression to find Mr. Veblen a believer in social science. The book is of the character of a book of social science. The book is of the character of a book of social science.

The Return.

I am sure many of you are as much surprised as I was to learn of the death of your old friend, Miss Jane. She was my constant companion and confidante, and I miss her very much. She has been with me through thick and thin, and I know she will be missed by all who knew her. She was a true friend, and I shall never forget her kindness and generosity. I am sure she will be at peace now, and I hope she will rest in eternal bliss.

The secret of her death is a mystery to me. I was with her until the last moment, and I cannot understand how she could have died so suddenly. She was in good health, and I never knew of anything that could have caused her to fall ill. I am writing to tell you of her passing, and to express my deep regret at her loss.

I have been told that she has left a large fortune, and I am sure she will be remembered by many people. She was a generous benefactor, and I am sure she will be missed by all who knew her.

I am writing to you to express my deep regret at her loss. She was a true friend, and I shall never forget her kindness and generosity. She was a true friend, and I shall never forget her kindness and generosity. She was a true friend, and I shall never forget her kindness and generosity.
