FROM RECENT SPEECHES IN CONGRESS.

Sunday Closing of World’s Fair.

Hon. Elijah A. Morse, of Massachusetts, spoke thus concerning the amendment to the World's Fair appropriation bill providing for Sunday closing: "Finally, I submit that there is no question but that a majority of the people of this country believe the sale of strong drink to be a menace to public peace and order, and they look to our action in this matter as a test of our wisdom and statesmanship."

Mr. President, they are not the first to propose in Congress the abolition of Sunday closing, but the time has come when we must either do it or shut our ears to such a proposition. There is no question but that there is to-day a tendency of our people to look away from the chief commercial centers of our country in order to avoid the influences that tend to draw men from the rural to the central commercial centers, and to the back of the back coun-

The Plan of Routes in Mail Delivery.

After the roads are classified and arranged for record the residences along the same are numbered. By this means mail is directed to the number and block where each resident is located.

The plan, as briefly described here, is given to the roads of a county for as great distances in a general direction as practicable, and numbered on the map under the name of the county and the name of the county seat or from one dwelling to another by the simple method dividing the difference of miles into the number of tenths of miles equivalent to 21.34 miles from the point of departure, usually the county seat of a circuit.

The country system, as I recall it, was in the boyhood of the country about as poor and insufficient as it could well be. In some counties the roads were so bad that a man could not drive his load because of the bad roads. He had to do it, and the dumb beasts of the nation would rise up and call us blessed for doing it.

This country system has been inaugurated is the most subtle and the most dangerous to liberty of any system ever invented by man, but we are not the only embroiled in slavery. Other people in the world could, if they had the spirit, the money, and the willingness to do so, increase the number of slaves, or to purchase as many slaves as the Government could. This is not what was ever known before, own great and good man after whom this capital city was founded, in the country's life and in the hearts of his countrymen."

There is no question but that a majority of the people of this country believe the sale of strong drink to be a menace to public peace and order, and they look to our action in this matter as a test of our wisdom and statesmanship."

Mr. Dwight, of Maine, said: "I do not wish to see this great institution closed during the Sabbath day, and I hope the amendment to this bill that provides for Sunday closing will be rejected."
The lambs grow fast and mature early. Full-grown rams reach 300 pounds and ewes 200 pounds, and lambs reach 150 pounds as soon as the fleece is off. They also breed twice a year if desired, although I doubt they should be carefully fed and tended to do this. This sheep is a native of Dorset-shire, England, a section lying on the coast opposite Portland, Maine. As a matter of fact they can be relied on to breed three crops of lambs in two years.

There are a few small lots of this breed in Michigan, but not enough to show how well they may be adapted to our conditions. I have come up to the description given, except they are well fed, which of course is the rule with all mutton breeds.

The development of the mutton growing industry has brought into notice many new breeds. I will tell you about them; and with the editor's permission, I will tell you a little about them and the reasons why they were selected, and why they were imported. I have just come in from my field of currants, having spent the whole morning in spraying the bushes. To be successful in making money from currants, one cannot do without knowledge and skill, and it is necessary to have a good many bricks in the wall of experience to profit from them.

The pruning needs especial care. The renewal process as practiced in vineyards applies pretty well to currant bushes, and should be a convenience at the time of fruit gathering. Upon sandy or gravelly soils I should plant the Long Bunch Holland and Bartlett, ripening Sept. 10-400

From my own experience, were I to make another plantation of currants, I should plant them in long rows six feet apart each way, and if the plantation were a large one I would have two rows of hedges or small trees, or perhaps as many as could be conveniently planted, 200 feet apart, across the space of eight feet one way in which the hedges or small trees could be planted. This would facilitate the spraying operations during the season of greatest fruit gathering, and the hedges or small trees would also serve as a protection against birds and the wind. The Long Bunch Holland is especially good for this purpose, and is far the best growing and most productive of the Dutch varieties. It is not fit for table use however, and you may be sure the market won't buy it.

Carambola, like all citrus fruits, are grown for table use and for general good treatment and an abundant supply. They are not likely to do well with a crop of old growth given up to the top. Some of the Dutch varieties are very hardy, and I have grown them for years with very little attention. They weigh and the buyer, as a rule, gets left. It is not at all an uncommon thing to find a pound or two in a box, and in as many cases I have bought a box which I was sure would get half of it. The dealers who pay twenty-eight or twenty-nine cents a pound for such stuff don't like it.

THE VALUE OF THE SILO. As a rule, if the crops are of one and one-half million acres devoted to growing silage and hay, there is a capital of about one hundred million dollars in the alfalfa alone, and 2,557,514 and 3,371,516 bales, with a value of products in the coming year estimated at $36,041,195.

MARKET GARDENING. MARKET GARDENING. The census investigation of truck gardens published by the United States Census Bureau shows that this is not new. Years ago a Vermont dairyman asserted that he could develop any young cow into a good milker by feeding her as if she were a little girl, and that she would be able to nurse a large calf. The dairyman had grown up in a farm and knew the work of the cow, and he was willing to give the cow the best possible treatment. It was not until the dairyman was well into the work that he found himself in debt, and had to sell the cow for a large profit. He then went into the baking business and found himself in debt again. He then went into the baking business and found himself in debt again.

Mr. W. A. Garfield. Conveying Currants. Very few of the small lots of this breed in Michigan, but not enough to show how well they may be adapted to our conditions. I have come up to the description given, except they are well fed, which of course is the rule with all mutton breeds.

Lecturers' Report of Grange No.,

I have been gratified by the promptness and efficiency with which many have performed their duty, but how am I to measure their fidelity. Our State Secretary's records are a constant reproach to the same indifference to duties neglected.

The reason for mailing them to the secretaries was that at present we have no list of lecturers, and we depended on the secretary to deliver them for us.

That members may know whether their Granges have been reported or not, I will give the numbers of those received. And if your Grange

We have no list of Granges, and I have no time in which to check their work through our agent, and since we have no time to do this, we will put them on your books as standing good and carried as such.

BY THE FIRST OF APRIL LAST THE FOLLOWING CIRCULAR AND BLANK WERE SENT OUT TO THE ADDRESS OF THE SECRETARY OF EACH SUBORDINATE GRANGE AS PER LIST OF 1892:

Winona, July 18, 1892.

H. Brigham, Master, of the National Grange, has already accepted an invitation to be present. Others will be announced as soon as engaged.

The delegates to the State Grange from the north, on December promised all who come the warmth of welcome. The farmers in the vicinity of Kemmet county are interested in making this an occasion of profit and great interest.

It is some too early to neglect the beginning of the season, but we are now in the midst of the season, and the time to think of the seed. The time to think of the seed is now, and the time to act on it is now.

We also observed, as we always do, the day set apart for children's day, and from the bright, happy faces of the children at the fair, we see that the day had been well spent. Our Grange has voted to celebrate children's day, in June, as we always do.

MAIL DELIVERY AND ROAD.

The road phase of the free rural mail delivery plan has not been discussed greatly, mainly perhaps because it is printed on the day before it is dated. Matter for publication ought to arrive at least three days before issue. So please get in your matter at as early a date as possible.

THE ROAD CAMPAIGN.

Please be prompt about sending in reports from Pomona meetings. We condense all you can and yet give the points that will secure the best articles at each meeting and have them forwarded to us as early as convenient.

THE STATE SECRETARY.

The State Secretary of the Grange calls attention in another column to a new feature in Grange work. It takes no honor to itself in thrusting this question before its readers, for all papers are doing so more or less. The method is best summed up in three terse expressions.

1. Intelligent discussion.
2. Concerted action.
3. Wise decision.

The public are thoroughly roused to the necessity of improving the roads in rural districts. The road phase of the free rural mail delivery plan has not been discussed greatly, mainly perhaps because it is printed on the day before it is dated. Matter for publication ought to arrive at least three days before issue. So please get in your matter at as early a date as possible.

How I Got the Nomination.

JUNE 15, 1892.

I met a man on the street one day that I had figured on to help me; he was generally prominent at county meetings, and had friends in many of the precincts who were prominent in their wards. I knew that I had to get some stronger man to help me; but if I had not met that man I should have had trouble. One reason a man is not often given the nomination is that he is too strong. I have had to learn that the man who is too strong and the man who is too weak are both handicapped. The man who is too strong is often defeated by a little talk about him. And the man who is too weak is often defeated by the stronger man's influence. But I have treated you to something stronger, but these temperance people would make a fuss and hurt my canvass.

Before doing so will you allow me space in your new paper to tell how I got the nomination in my last campaign. It may help those who are to take our places in the several offices that are to be filled at this fall's election:

The strength of the Order rests in the Subordinate Granges. Yet we should not be able to maintain an existence without the substantial backing and support of the State and National Granges. The life of each depends upon the cooperation of all. Besides those we have our county Grange on whose existence none of the others depend financially for support, but it is a branch of the work which we can so effect to home, or in any way we can.

Many subordinate Granges are invariably well represented in the county Grange, and by which we can strengthen our Grange and add to our numbers and support to the others.

The greatest need of our county Grange is an annual session. In the course of the year there have been a few meetings of the county Grange, but there have been no regular sessions of the county Grange. This was the truest warrior That ever buckled sword, This the most gifted poet. We lay the sage to rest. And give the bard an honored place, And we watch his funeral car; They show the banners taken, When the lights like glories fall, And the organ rings and the sweet choir sings, With costly marble dressed, In the great minster transept Where the lights like glories fall, And the organ rings and the sweet choir sings, With costly marble dressed, In the great minster transept We might go on to enumerate the many duties which have to be performed three times a day every day in the house. The word or a gentle caress from us the proceedings of the last three! would lull their disappointment into a rest.

We have passed away before noon. So with us. Things looking like mountain tops have vanished as they reached. Upon the horizon. Perhaps at our right a forest is donning her spring attire. Here is an orchard dressed in a robe of young green, filling the whole atmosphere with the eager perfume of the flowers, cattle, horses and sheep lastening to their morning meal. The mother earth has so beautifully changed her appearance in their presence. In the morning they are filled with eager expectations, and expire on the scene if they come Industry and lastening, seeming to picture to us perfect satisfaction.

For these reasons we should have one or two. It is desirable to have our children read to us. It is more convenient to attend to business than to prepare a meal. We are never too old to learn, or to do better; but we can each day take up the thread of life, improving by our failures, and thus weave useful, if not beautiful patterns, which will remain after we have passed away. The importance of young people to the continued existence of the Grange is evident. We must not put our light under a basket; and we must not regard the old as incapable of learning.

Quite a catalogue might be written of "Thou shalt" and "Thou shalt not," but example has more influence than in the letter. It is a very essential one. We must not put our light under a basket; and we must not regard the old as incapable of learning, but they are not to be taught as they have been; they are to be taught as young people.
College and Station.

College and Station.

The form department has sent out the following information and instructions concerning rape.

Rape is a beneficial plant much resembling mustard. It grows from two to four feet in height. In early growth it has greenish-tinted leaves, but it may be distinguished, as it has very prominent yellow flowers, and more rapid growth.

It is widely cultivated in Europe for the oleaginous seeds, from which oil is obtained. In England it is an important crop, and is more extensively grown for the purpose of feeding sheep. In Michigan, the soil, climate, market, and climatic conditions are all favorable for the crop as regards culture. Rape is grown on heavy or meadow soils although it will do well on any soil well adapted for producing turnips. The least desirable soils are clay and imperfectly drained. Much of the seed is sold in small quantities.

The land should be thoroughly plowed, over a full till, and if the soil is dry it should be turned over. The Customary method of sowing on drill is probably not adaptable to this State, owing to our hot and dry summers, and it is only when I plant the seed in rows about 28 inches apart, and make a good seed bed, will the plants come up in very dry weather; their growth is very slow, and if they are not kept well enough out of half-grown, they come to be rapidly transplanted. It is therefore customary to use the rape crop.

Any clay soil or even a gravelly soil may be grown, but it seems to be most favorably suited for fattening sheep. It usually matures about the middle of September and pasturing may begin at that time. It is an easily safe food for valuable breeding ewes, and makes excellent enlivening, which induces some cattle to feed on rape, and is often acceptable to cattle and hogs. It is a safe rule never to turn any animal on rape when very hungry, but if the plant is allowed to mature the animal is greatly benefited. A constant and plentiful supply of water should be available for animals pastured upon rape, even when the ground may be dry, we have yet to learn whether an additional supply of water will be profitable.

In the directions the moisture should be enough as follows: 1. Bury two plants to the seed and three to the one and one-half pound per acre. 2. Sow at a depth of 10 to 30 inches apart. 3. Use a one pound of seed to the one and one-half pound per acre. 4. Sow at a depth of 30 inches apart. 5. Use a low level. 6. Keep a careful account of the amount of seed sown. 7. Commence pasturing about the middle of May. 8. Before turning stock on rape, use a small amount of grass or clover. 9. Keep a watchful eye for blight, and when once the disease appears, make a thorough examination of the field. 10. Keep the sheep on rape the coming season at the first sign of disease. 11. The above directions are not arbitrary, but are based upon the results of experiments conducted during the past season.

If the heads of families practice speaking correctly and properly before their children the latter will learn to speak it correctly; but writing is quite different.

In the dairy it is of the same nature. The milk has been produced by cows that are eating fresh vegetation, and the flavor of the milk is affected by the vegetation eaten by the cows. If the cows are given good food, it will not be affected by the vegetation eaten by the cows.

If you want the cows to yield perfect flavored milk do not let them eat leeks, fungus growths, or any noxious vegetation. This implies that you must have a clean pasture, which should be a part and parcel of every dairy farm.

letters which came to him from his far away home? No, if they were in the familiar handwriting of dear ones that were grown weary waiting for just a line telling them the brave soldier boy was still alive, sought for bad grammar?
