

Osric, Tongue in Cheek, Longs for Old-Time Thanksgiving Dinners

By Earl Brigham (Osric)

Who among us doesn't remember those old-fashioned Thanksgivings with a touch of nostalgia?

You know the ones I mean. When we got up at six o'clock on a frosty morning so as to be up and away bright and early at half-past twelve. When an unexpected sizzzer snap cracked the cylinder block, or split the head, or made us freeze up four times between home and Smiley's Corners. When we all piled into the old seven passenger and before we were out 15 minutes, Junior had frozen an ear, Mary had nipped her best stockings, and mother had just remembered that the gas heater had been on just about long enough to blow up the place.

Ah, but the scenery at least was authentic. The corn shocks drooping bravely under the bright November sun! The golden pumpkins, with their three-foot crowns of dirty gray-white snow! And the brown-leaved trees standing like so many telegraph poles on a barren knoll! Yes, truly, we don't have weather now like we used to have on those Thanksgiving Days!

Then remember at last we turned up the old familiar lane, with the snow-capped rail fence stretching out on both sides of us? And father tore the devil out of his hands trying to open the old wire gate. And mother wouldn't speak to him because of the language he used.

Then at last the house. About as unpainted a habitation that ever stood in a frozen farmyard. And there was old Aunt Della bustling out to the car, waving to everyone. And of course we had to kiss Uncle Cyrus, although he tasted of unshaved whiskers and cut-plug.

Yes, the old homestead was a little desolate. But inside loving labor made it a place of old-fashioned cheer and welcome. Cousin Harold had just started to re-paper the house the day before Thanksgiving, and mother tripped over his paste-bucket.

And then dear old Aunt Della came in to tell us that dinner wasn't ready, because while she was waiting for us she let the turkey burn to a cinder, and would we mind eating ham and eggs for dinner.

Junior began to cry, and father said of course not. Although whatever he said under his breath made mother mad again. Then to touch everything off, Mary spilled cranberry sauce all over herself.

Then remember after traveling 150 miles in the cold, we didn't get turkey after all. And we had to put up with Uncle Cyrus chewing tobacco at the table. And finally father said he guessed we'd better start home because we had a long trip back.

Yes, they were really fine, those old-fashioned Thanksgivings. And remember what father said when we got home at last? After car trouble, and Junior freezing the other ear?

"The only things we had to be thankful for was that we didn't stay all night at Aunt Della's on those corn-cob mattresses, and that we were finally home and Sunday dinner was only two days off."

Turkey Is Object Of Exodus

Students to Leave Campus Wednesday For Three Days

Turkey dinners, a three-day rest, and perhaps some studying will be goals of most of the college's 6,600 students when they leave campus Wednesday for the annual Thanksgiving vacation. Although slated for a week later on the college calendar, officials conformed to presidential proclamation advancing the date.

All men's and women's dormitories will remain open. It was announced yesterday, but only a handful of students will be living in one.

UNION STAYS OPEN
The Union building will be kept open during vacation, and several meetings are scheduled for the holidays. The cafeteria will observe Sunday serving hours Thursday noon, being open for only one meal. Regular hours will be followed for the remainder of vacation.

A dance has been scheduled for Saturday night in the Union for the week-end's only social activity on campus. It has been planned for entertainment of students returning for the Spartan-Temple football game Sunday afternoon.

Band members will get their vacation along with other students and will not appear at the Temple game. Chieftainers, however, will be on hand for the contest. Sam Yester, lead yell man, and Verberly.

This marks the third year that Michigan State students have had a three-day holiday for Thanksgiving—TURKEY—rare 3

Change of Date Creates Observance Problems

Christmas comes but once a year and so does the Fourth of July, but Thanksgiving comes whenever it seems most convenient and you never can tell how many there are going to be, but who cares as long as there is plenty to eat and the car doesn't break down on the way home.

It's a lot of trouble, though, for out-of-state students who have to make men without a count of some of their folks will be celebrating the fatted turkey on the 30th day of the month.

Some of the states have come to the president's proclamation. Others are straddling the fence and are celebrating both. It is a boon to merchants and the boys who have been eating in restaurants all year.

One little county out west went one step further than the president and celebrated the 16th as the annual turkey day. The county fathers believed in so doing they have decreed neither the wrath of the governor, nor the holidays have created a complicated situation in college. Dean Texas way, the University of Texas has issued the holiday periods to meet the unusual problem. Merchants there are also observing the two days.

COLLEGES ARE SPLIT

Iowa State college officials, although proving to be rather rebellious in observing the 30th, struck upon a bright idea that probably would meet with the approval of M.S.C. student body. They have cut Wednesday morning classes to 35 minutes and have done away with afternoon sessions.

Auburn is setting its holidays on the new date while many other colleges are presenting parties and football games for frustrated students. Manhattan university is one of the celebrators. Indiana, Pennsylvania and Illinois are definitely celebrating the traditional day on the new date, while Wisconsin and Minnesota are maintaining the old one.

Begin Two New Loan Funds

Two new student loan funds were inaugurated at M.S.C. this week, one by the State Board of Agriculture and the other by Alpha Phi Omega, national Boy Scout service fraternity.

APO's fund was begun with proceeds from the Homecoming dance the organization sponsored Saturday night, totaling $140. It is to be used for needy students, and will be administered by the faculty student loan committee.

The club plans to add to the fund, and other organizations have the same privilege. It will be used especially for underclassmen.

The State Board fund will be made up of funds resulting from student tuition reductions. The fund made this decision at its regular November meeting yesterday.

Pick Riflemen Next Week

Tryouts for the Michigan State college rifle team will be held during the week of November 27, it was announced yesterday by Major W. R. Best. The prospect team will compete between 13 and 20 men, Best said, and will be chosen late in January.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 20.—Government's plan for sending women thrown out of work by the Neutrality act to special training schools has struck a severe snag. Union officials have refused to back the plan. Union war-cry is "Maritime commission says go to concentration camp or starve."

Pedestrians Share the Blame

Efforts by the East Lansing police department under the leadership of Chief Harold Haun to alleviate the traffic problem have met with approval from townspeople and students.

The traffic survey recently taken for the highway department has shown that 58 per cent of pedestrian crossings are improper in execution.

Usually when traffic problems are discussed, too many are likely to blame the drivers for everything, maintaining that nothing the pedestrian can do is wrong.

Pedestrians, like drivers, can be at fault, according to circumstances. Students and faculty alike have a bad habit of crossing in the middle of a block or else dashing between cars that have stopped for a red light.

It seems that after a thorough analysis of the traffic situation, the necessity of posting signs on Grand River, both east and west of the campus, to warn drivers of a speed limit is apparent.

But advising students to cross only at the corners would be a difficult matter. It is doubtful that they would obey advice on this matter. It is too handy to cross between corners.

Suggestions on a solution for this problem will be appreciated by Chief Haun. It is certain that cooperation of students, faculty and townspeople is needed if Grand River avenue is to be made safer for all concerned.

CHANGE

But with all the hollering about changing the date, this is not the first time that it has been found necessary to change Thanksgiving. The day seems to have begun back in the days of Greek prehistory when people worshiped Demeter, harvest goddess. Pilgrims were influenced by the custom which had made its way to England and was also being used by the Dutch to celebrate the fact that the Spaniards had not cut off all their heads. George Washington was the first president to introduce the custom in 1789 and again in 1795. Other presidents followed, but only intermittently. Governors took it up about 1830, but southern states rejected it because it was said to be of northern origin. During the Civil war, Lincoln proclaimed the first in a long series of last of November holidays which lasted until the present day. giving. For several years previous to that time, only one day was granted. In those years, Spartans took the Monday following the State-U. of M. game as a holiday. In October, 1937, however, State students went to classes after the Michigan game and presented this along with other arguments to the State Board of Agriculture in a petition for a longer Thanksgiving holiday. Carried out by Student council and the State News, the plea was successful, the present length vacation was granted that year, and has continued since. This revision in fee schedule will particularly affect Home Economics students studying at Merrill-Palmer school in Detroit, and police administration students taking instruction at the state police barracks. Staff changes made by the board included authorization of appointment of a new member of the education department faculty, who will have charge of student placement.

Spartans Aim For .500 Mark In Last Game With Temple

Holsinger Impressed With Strength Of Owls After Villanova Clash

Faced with the eventuality of closing their 1939 season with less than a .500 average for the first time in eleven years, the Michigan State gridgers today began pointed for a much needed triumph over Temple university which invades Macklin field next Saturday.

Up to date the Spartans have a record of three wins, four losses and one tie, the best they can hope for is a .500 average provided they register a triumph over the Owls. Since 1928 when Harry Kipke was head football coach the Spartans met with such disastrous results. In that year three games were won, four lost and one tied. Only 11 times in 43 years of intercollegiate football has State failed to finish a season with a winning percentage.

State teams coached by Charley Bachman since 1933 never lost more than two games per season until last fall. In 1938, however, the Spartans slipped and finished with six wins and three lost. The Spartans will be slight favorites to conquer the Temple Owls in view of their gradual improvement which has been evident in the last few games. While the Temple eleven, now being coached by Fred Swan following Pop Warner's retirement last year, has an unimpressive record for the season, it will be seeking revenge for a 10-0 defeat at the hands of the State gridgers last fall.

Assistant Coach Joe Holsinger returned from Philadelphia where he witnessed Temple's downfall to Villanova last Saturday with a report that will throw plenty of action into the Spartan camp. According to Holsinger, the Owls have been the victims of bad breaks and are one of the most powerful teams he has watched this fall. The Spartans came out of last Saturday's 7-7 tie with Indiana in excellent physical condition, but Bachman gave his regulars a day of rest yesterday. The remainder of the squad held a light workout.

Frats Playoff
Playoff championship honors in the Inter Fraternity touch football league will go on the block at 8 o'clock tonight on Old College field when Sigma Nu meet Lambda Chi Alpha in defense of its 1938 crown.

A Familiar Sight --- Eddie Pearce in Action

State's stocky right halfback has a worried look on his face as he ponders on a way to escape Arch Harris, Indiana's big nose left end. Harris was on the alert for trickery, however, and made the tackle in hold Pearce to a short gain around left end.

13 Senior Gridmen Play Last Game Saturday

By Bob Hatton
Swan songs in gridiron tempo will swing the football recession of thirteen Michigan State seniors who play their final game of college football when the Spartans tackle Temple Saturday on Macklin field.

After three years of valiant service these State warriors bow out before what promises to be one of the smallest crowds of the season. A Thanksgiving vacation moved up to conform to the Nov. 23 date set by President Roosevelt will prohibit a well earned farewell from being accorded these men by State students and their fans.

For three years a sparkling Spartan eleven, Lyle "Rocky" Rockenbach, Crystal Falls, Ill. guard, has been one of the leading linemen in college football. Yet in all these three years, the stocky guard has never received due recognition for his great work in the forward wall. With his senior year coming to a close Rocky has been playing even harder than before and it is but fitting tribute that this fine guard should be nationally recognized this season.

INJURIES HURT PEARCE
Eddie Pearce, a prime favorite with Spartan fans since he first made his appearance in State's football camp in 1936, also graduates. The diminutive Flint halfback who was forced to give the spotlight to Johnny Pinnel for two years was due to be the No. 1 man in State's backfield this season. Injuries early in the season laid back Pearce to the sidelines and not until the Syracuse game did the likeable gridder return to lead State on its football comeback.

Ron Alling, one of State's best pivot men in recent years, was cut down by the many hits in the opening contest with Wayne and has seen only intermittent service since. Ralph Bennett, Mt. Clemens end, was lost in the same game and did not return to action until last Saturday's contest with Indiana.

Three Spartan tackles will play the last time Saturday when Alex "Butch" Keltko, Lee Bruncker and George Gargett call it a football day. These three have handled the tackle situation in excellent fashion for two years and are sure to be missed.

KINEK, DRAKE GO
Mike Kinek, the Whiting, Ind. flanker and one of the most popular gridgers ever to wear the Green and White, is ready to turn his attention to matters other than football. Likewise is Gerry Drake, the boy who failed to give up after riding the bench for two years but who came back to start two of State's games this fall.

Quarterbacks who will be missed are Don Rossi and Herin Kiewicki. Neither has seen plentiful service this year, but both are good men to have around in a clutch.

Besides Rockenbach, two guards will be in there for the last time. These are Eddie Papor and Myron Masny. Both have been handicapped with injuries this year, and their loss has hurt State's play more than a little bit.

Spartan Cagers Follow the Trend

Although right game schedules for Michigan State teams have been the usual thing up until this year, we don't think that one more game makes much difference one way or the other. The trend throughout the country is toward heavier schedules, teams in the west and south annually playing anywhere from nine to twelve games.

The Spartans moved their scene of operation today to the gymnasium floor at the Boys' Vocational school in Lansing, where they will face their first two home opponents of the season. Latest reports state that the new Jensen gymnasium will be ready for the first game of winter term on January 6.

State will meet Kalamazoo, traditionally the schedule opener, one week from next Monday, and the following Saturday will pair off with Ann Arbor for the first of a two-game series with the University of Michigan. Washington State is the other opponent that the Spartans will face before they swing out to the west coast during Christmas vacation.

Currently the first string lineup finds Mack Hutt and Bob Phillips at forward, Max Headman at center, and Chet Johnson and Max Delyempe at guard. This quartet is composed of all veteran lettermen returning from last year's team.

Spartan Sportfolio

By Don Anderson

Cochl Bachman's recommendation that Wayne university be dropped from Michigan State's grid schedule next fall has received more than a little comment on and off the campus.

With all due respect to the opinion of Charley Bachman, we rather favor the retention of Wayne on the schedule. For four seasons the Detroit school has afforded clean, interesting competition beneficial to both schools. As a Wayne official put it, "Both State and Wayne made money on the game."

Aside from the financial, there is the feeling of natural rivalry between the two schools. Wayne is on the way up in a football way and the game with State was a fine stepping stone to big-time football. And while a victory over the Tartars didn't exactly add to the Spartans' prestige, it did give them some measure of satisfaction to beat the Detroit eleven.

The objections to the further scheduling of Wayne are based mainly on the assumption that nine games are too many and that by opening the season a week earlier than Michigan, the opportunity is afforded for Wolverine scouts to get the laydown on State.

The football season is short. It is over all too quickly. The dropping of Wayne will make it all the shorter. If the Tartars ranked with the best eleven in the nation, their presence next year probably would make the schedule a bit heavy. But with the Wayne game definitely in the warm-up class, it is our opinion that a game with the Tartars has more advantages than disadvantages.

Admittedly, Michigan scouts do have the chance to take voluminous notes on State's offense and defense a week before the Ann Arbor classic. But just how much do they learn? Scarcely anything that they didn't already know. The Spartans play under wraps in the Wayne game, using only a handful of plays. These plays are strictly of the "I'll give you the ball you run" variety. Michigan scouts have diagrammed them hundreds of times before.

The game undoubtedly is of great benefit to both Spartan coaches and players, for it allows the Spartans to have one game under their belt before meeting Michigan, while the Wolverines must meet State cold, so to speak. That one game goes a long way toward bringing out weaknesses and faults that appear only in regular competition. The fact that Wayne opened the schedule this year certainly was beneficial to a young State team very uncertain of its own ability.

Aside from the fact that the game bares faults or corrects before the all-important Michigan game, there is another consideration. A contest such as this gives the players confidence. They are better more coordinated with their teammates, and are broken into harness after the summer layoff. The Wayne game has gone far toward lessening the rustiness in the Michigan clash. We have the testimonial of more than one player on that score.

If Michigan State does not have a reaction from this game in the Detroit area, we think the Spartans can ill afford to support them. There are a lot of persons in Detroit who would like to see the Spartans in action, and something happened to make them less interested. The dropping of Wayne could very well do "something."

Abbot 15, Mason 8 Meet for Title

Four dorm sevens filled the air-planes with passes last night in the semi-finals of the dormitory touch football league and when the arc lights dimmed, Abbot 15 and Mason 8 were paired in tonight's final contest.

With sparkplug Jack Hislop playing a lot of football, Abbot 15's small but fast aggregation made light work of Mason 1 in the curtain raiser, 20-0. The opening quarter had scarcely got underway before Hislop took George Bush's flat pass on his own 45 yard line and raced 55 yards to score.

The winners struck again in the second stanza when Bill Lynn galloped around right end to the Mason 10. Hislop at this point heaved a short pass over the goal line to Jim Stover for the second tally. This time the extra attempt clicked with Hislop passing to Bush.

In the second game, Mason 1 waited until the final period and then counted a single touchdown to drop Abbot 12, 7-0. Paul Stark gathered a Nelson Bryant toss in the end zone to strike the damaging blow. The Mason squad scored the extra point via another Bryant pass, this time to Bob Young.
