State Needs Money to Keep Pace With Growing Enrollment Demands

Michigan State college students are sitting in right now on what may prove to be the determining factor in the future of their college, and 90 per cent of the student body is almost unaware of what is going on. Not as a plea for action, but more as an explanation, following facts on discussions now taking place in the Michigan legislature are outlined.

Early Thursday the House ways and means committee approved a bill by Gov. Harry Kelly to provide funds for expansion of the state's colleges, universities and mental hospitals. The bill was greatly needed by both Michigan State college and the University of Michigan. MSC was to receive $3,000,000 and the University $3,300,000. On that $3,000,000 rests Michigan State's future, for without it as a bulwark to look toward, the college will need to consider limitation of future enrollment figures.

But, with the legislature's adjournment in sight, Grand Rapids representative Charles Feenstra stopped the governor's bill by declaring that the appropriations were more essential for the aid of the 58 per cent of Michigan veterans in cities who will not be using college facilities.

How such an appropriation would be used to assist the non-college veterans is unknown, whereas Governor Kelly has worked ont the following program to aid veterans in recommending the appropriation to MSC:

With an easing of the housing situation now in sight, the next consideration is adequate classroom facilities. For years these facilities have been inadequate, but the recent rise in enrollment has made the situation critical. Everyone knows the condition of the natural science buildings now in existence. Each is antiquated, in poor repair, ill-adapted to the needs of modern science teaching and have been reported as fire hazards. In the last five years practically no students have been trained in the natural science field.

Equally attractive to returning veterans are courses in physics, agricultural and electrical engineering. Recent developments in these fields have made the opportunities for trained men inexhaustible, but students cannot be accommodated because of undersized classrooms and lack of equipment.

The construction of new dormitories where home management houses were located makes the building of a home management laboratory imperative. State has had one of the country's outstanding home economics schools, but without home management facilities, it stands to give only partial home economics training.

Essential, not only to the anticipated new buildings but to those now under construction, is a new power plant. Without it the two dormitories now being built can have no heating, electric or water facilities.

Such is the building program as the governor outlined it; a program essential to the normal growth of Michigan State college. Without the necessary funds the only solution will be a curtailed enrollment resulting in the thwarting of ambitions of college-minded persons throughout the state. For students now attending the college it will mean continuing under present overcrowded conditions with little prospect of relief in sight.

The legislative bloc of Michigan mayors and supervisors fighting the governor's recommendations may very possibly carry enough weight to stop sollege appropriations. The future of Michigan State, whether it is to be a small institution turning out partly trained graduates or wheth-The er it is to be instrumental in turning out thousands of graduates highly trained in essential fields, hangs in the balance this weekend.

NO the Editor:

May I suggest another Okinawa home now for rent? It is a two-story construction of top. The first floor may be used for elassrooms with blacked-out windows for night sessions. The holes in the flooring will lend the proper anti-sedatar touch for the sleepier students. On the second story are ample accommodations for eighteen women including a large beau parlor which has been known to hold 40 men (if you can get 'em). Large sliding windows frame a view of the China sea and a quartermaster dump across the road

Quarters must be shared with two families of lizards but these, however, use the upper walls only and have never been known to descend. Fortunately the more friendly rats vacated the premises after the October typhoon.

Telephone privileges are in-cluded and your boyfriend a mile away may be contacted by phoning through the peace-pipe-sitting-bull-pretty-girl stations.

The new tenants may also use the shower built by the marines. It is suggested that they figure out some means of draining off the water. Rent is a nominal two yen a year. Come to Okinawa, girls, for a
