Spartacade chairmen last week laid down rules to eliminate from the event costumes they consider too sexy, risque and revealing

If censorship through another group was imminent. Spartacade's self-regulation is preferable to any imposed by another organization.

However, the event which last year contributed more than $2,500 to Campus Chest has already been forced to bar games of chance. The Spartacade chairmen now wish to further restrict variety and hamper participating groups with a set of rules regarding costumes

The event began in the spring of 1951, and has grown each year since then. Spartacade chairmen would undoubtlike to see it keep growing. They have suggested the restrictions on this year's show would be for the good of future events.

The regulations cannot bar the type of thing they are aiming at. Rules, as they say, can be gotten around. Its the spirt of propriety the event needs. This is up to the students.

Enthusiastic student response is essential to Spartacade's success. Attempts to channel the acts into a prescribed pattern with a set of restrictions can quickly kill that enthusiasm and harm future Spartacades
