Communication Lacking In Judiciary Tempest

The current furor over the illegal seating of a student judiciary representative is a tempest in a teapot. And it points out a great lack of communication which exists between the unwieldy Student Congress and the little known Student Judiciary.

The controversy revolves around Rackelne Perry, Detroit sophomore, whose petition to serve on Judiciary was denied by Student Congress. The reason given, claims Miss Perry, was that as a resident assistant she would be more "apt to take the Administration's viewpoint."

Chief Justice Harvey Elliott says he allowed Miss Perry to sit as voting member because Congress had not officially notified him that she was not accepted.

"I felt it was in the best interests of the court to keep her on until we could replace her," Elliott said. "I figured if Congress disapproved that strongly, they could have notified me to remove her." He was aware "through the grapevine", that her petition had been denied, he said.

Student Congress is currently conducting a "thorough investigation" of the situation, in an attempt to determine why the orders it never officially issued were not followed.

The one valuable thing that may result from this battle is that the procedures and policies of this far little known Student Judiciary will be examined. The Student Court operates for the most part as an extension of the Dean of Students office, and from reports, is doing an adequate job.

But if Student Congress is to be--and it should be--concerned about what goes on in the court, it will have to straighten out its lines of communication.

How They're Erasing History

The de-Stalinization process in Russia goes on leaving no stones turned.

Only two weeks ago, the Soviet commander at Stalingrad -- Marshal Andrei I. Yeremenko -- accused Josef Stalin of military blunders. At the same time he praised Nikita Khrushchev for his role in the epic battle of World War II.

This is the third piece of de-Stalinization focused upon the city named after the Soviet dictator.

Since the 1961 de-Stalinization, the city has been called Volgograd and the battle renamed "The Great Battle on the Volga."

That's one thing about people in power under a dictatorial system -- they can rewrite history anyway they please as long as it suits their purposes.

Can you imagine in the United States a Democratic administration de-Hooverizing the Hoover Dam and de-Lincolinizing Lincoln, Neb.?

Can you imagine a Republican administration de-Wilsonizing the Woodrow Wilson scholarships and de-Rooseveltizing all the Roosevelt High Schools and Roosevelt Parks in the country?

Why it would be as unlikely as a Big Ten School de-emphasizing the emphasis on football.

Vending Machines For Library: Good Idea

A Student Congress proposal to place vending machines in the library lounges has some definite merit.

Students presently have to head across the Circle to the Union if they want a soft drink or a candy bar during a break.

The drinks could be limited to the lounge areas just as cigarettes are now and should not cause a significant amount of additional work for the janitors.

The expanded service would help the lounges serve more than just cigarette smokers.

Since the students obey the present smoking regulations, there is no reason to assume that they would disobey soft drink regulations.

The vending machine AUSG proposal deserves at least a trial run. It is an example of AUSG attempting to implement student desires and deserves encouragement.

Hee Haw

You can't really accuse us of being opposed to abstract art, like Uncle Nikita Khrushchev, but you can accuse us of bearing a healthy skepticism about the values that are used in judgment of abstract art in America.

The other day in Baltimore (maybe you heard about it) a Mexican burro named Jack painted a painting called "Black Wax" and promptly sold it to a Texas man (where else) for $50. The burro painted the painting with the assistance of his pal, Director Arthur Watson of the Baltimore Zoo. Director Watson read Uncle Nikita's point that most abstract paintings looked as if they had been done by "a donkey's tail" and decided to try out the theory.

"Black Wax" was quite a successful, such as those things go, proving that Uncle Nikita is something of a critic himself. A Baltimore art critic was called in to look at the abstraction and characterized it as very hot stuff--until Zoo Director Watson told him that it had been painted by the south end of a burro going north. The art critic has not been heard from since. And that, ironically speaking, is the end of this little tail. -Denver Post

Letters To The Editor

On Proof, Fools, Iran

To the Editor:

In reference to the letters concerning the existence of God, it must be said that Miss McDonald and Miss Wright have only succeeded in stating their convictions, and not in disproving the dogmatic assertion of Mr. Nadell, if such was their intention.

God cannot be proved by stating that the "perfection" that surrounds us shows the existence of a master planner. In the first place, what is considered to be perfect differs from individual to individual. Secondly, to assume that all things are perfect because they spring forth from a supernatural being and fit his purposes leads one into circular reasoning.

That is to say, "God exists and all things are created by Him and fit into His plan and therefore are perfect. Therefore, because all things are perfect, there is a God." This is a circular argument. The point, not only that, but Miss Wright would like us to judge this perfection from the standpoint of subjective standards (flowers, etc.), not from the standpoint of perfection as being integral to God's plan. Under those conditions people who dislike a temperature of minus twenty degrees are entitled to a disbelief in God.

Miss McDonald also has a point, but it proves nothing, except her belief as a matter of fact. One can accept Jesus Christ only if one can accept God, and then only if one is a Christian.

If a person believes that there is sufficient evidence of God due to positive, recorded traces of God which have not been touched by the sands of time and the waves of reinterpretation, then that belief is on solid footing. To argue circularly puts one on a quicksand, and it would be better to fall back onto the imperious granite of blind faith.

Thomas E. Anger, 219 Charles, E. L.

No Evidence

To the Editor:

Ten thousand innocent human beings lie crushed by the walls of their own homes as an earthquake destroys their city. Children walk the streets with bellies inflamed by hunger. And nations devote themselves to murdering each other. And what does Miss Wright say about all this? "There is too much perfection, love and beauty in the world, and in the universe, to say there is no God!"

If you believe there is, He must be an incompetent and a bungler.

Miss Wright also wonders how "any fully intelligent, rational being (can) possibly deny the existence of God." It's a well known fact, Miss Wright, that those who accept God do so ultimately on faith. And to accept Him on faith means that you accept emotionally what you can't prove materially. Myself, I'd sooner believe in Santa Claus.

It occurs to me, Miss Wright, that you are the one who's irrational; that you are the intellectual conformist. You believe what you are programmed to believe, and chances are you didn't choose your church; you were born into it. The atheist considers what he is told to believe and disagreeing, he has the integrity to break and stand for his own convictions.

No, Miss Wright, I don't believe in God. I believe in Man. I see man as his own master, striving to attain his own perfection. And I don't believe it is necessary to attribute his virtues to some external force.

Mike Grossman, 307 E. Shaw

Waste of Time

To the Editor:

How foolish is it to argue about God, for it is God who gave us the words with which to argue. If you would dare deny the existence of something that you cannot even begin to understand, then you would be a fool, you fool.

Walter A. Zilonis, Jr., 4112 S. Kansas

Confirmation

To the Editor:

In connection with recent comments in the State News on the situation in Iran (such as the letter from Mr. Parvis Tamami), it may be well to have some substantiation of these opinions from a non-Iranian. Otherwise your readers may feel the Iranian students are unduly critical.

As a Fulbright Lecturer at the University of Tehran last year, I was there when the "student riot" broke out and the troops went in to stop it. It was apparent to us that these troops had instructions to damage the physical equipment in the university, a procedure which goes beyond the call of duty in "quelling riot."

Local Station Denies Charges

A Lansing television station, WJIM-TV, denied charges Tuesday that its alleged "bootleg" telecasts have been cutting home attendance at the Detroit Lions football games.

Station President Harold Gross said it took a survey of its own after the Lions had taken one to prove that Detroit residents and bars were using special antennas to get the telecasts from channel six.

Gross said his survey showed that only nine of 756 homes called while the game was in progress were tuned to WJIM-TV. He also said 37 bars in Detroit were tuned to the Lions on channel six and that average attendance at the bars was 10 patrons.

Gross also denied a charge by Lion General Manager Edwin Anderson that channel six was putting out a stronger signal at game time than any other time. The station president said this charge was "without fact or proof."

ROTC Company To Train Like Rangers

The Rangers, the U.S. Army's toughest soldiers, now have their counterparts on campus. Selected Army ROTC cadets will wear the green beret of the newly formed Counterguerrilla Warfare Company, and will be receiving Ranger-like training in combat skills. The company is a result of a Continental Army Command directive to improve the physical condition and ability of future Army officers. Last Thursday the company received training in scuba diving in the Women's IM pool. Capt. James H. Harris, cadre advisor, said the company will develop skill and interest in hand-to-hand combat, demolition, mountain climbing, bayonet training, and other areas of value to future officers.

"This training will stand the cadet in good stead if he plans to go into Ranger or Airborne training," Harris said. Gary R. Wilson, cadet company unit commander, said the training will be every Thursday from 7-9 p.m. Selection for the unit will be based on grade averages in ROTC, all college averages and results of a series of physical fitness tests, he said. Members of the faculty and Army non-commissioned officers will provide most of the instruction. Any sophomore, junior or senior cadet, with a 2-point all-college and a 3-point in Army ROTC is eligible to apply for membership in the unit.

A nursery will be provided for pre-school children from 2-6 at the People's Church in East Lansing for the afternoon session only. ## Farm Runoff Considered Pollutant River Study Includes Biology

The problem of the Red Cedar River has plagued the campus and East Lansing community for many years. The river looks almost beautiful as it winds through the campus and the surrounding area. But it smells. Laurence Quill, director of the Institute of Water Research, said the problem of the Red Cedar is "much broader than that of simple pollution." Quill said the Red Cedar receives a certain amount of industrial pollution and runoff from farm lands as well as garbage. "Any study of the Red Cedar must take the complete biology of the stream into account. For example, the effects of contamination on fish is a very important part of such a study." A project on the ecology of the Red Cedar is now being carried out by Peter I. Tack and Robert C. Ball of the fisheries and wildlife department. Ball said the project is a "continuous one which has gone on for nearly eight years." "It can't be determined when the project will end," he said, "because the very nature of water means that new elements for study are constantly being added."

Ball said the study was basically concerned with determining what elements are degrading the quality of water in the Red Cedar. Some of these elements include nutrients (nitrogen, phosphorus), side wastes, insecticides, salt and soil runoff from farmlands. The study also includes research on the effects of certain amounts of pollution on fish. "In studying the complete biology of the stream, we are attempting to hit every factor which affects the Red Cedar," Ball said. "It is undeniable that the Red Cedar's value to the community is affected by these factors." "They also affect the recreational value of the river." A project sponsored by the department of civil and sanitary engineering is studying contamination in ground water aquifers. An aquifer is any natural formation in which water can be stored. Quill said some spots in the base of the Red Cedar are clay and sand deposits rather than sandstone. Like the five other major water research projects being carried out at MSU, the Red Cedar project is supported this year by part of a $13,000 grant from the National Science Foundation.
