Draft Dilemma: To Tell Or Not To Tell

By ANDREW MOLLISON State News Staff Writer

Yes, Academia, there is a Selective Service System. Because of the draft, a sophomore guard on last fall's football team was about-facing on a U.S. Army drill field this spring while his teammates did push-ups on a Michigan State practice field. His grades were low, and he was inducted.

Because of the draft, a student government official told a Time Magazine reporter-photographer team last month that he had no plans for the future. He expected to be drafted soon after graduation. Meanwhile the student, who was awarded a degree in hotel, restaurant and institutional administration June 12, had received one solid job offer -- as a salad boy for the Conrad Hilton hotel chain.

Because of the draft, the president of Wayne State University announced last Thursday that next year his school plans to embark upon a program of non-cooperation with local draft boards that request a student's class standing.

'Identification of students as a separate group eligible for deferment without regard to other factors," he said, "has had the effect of reinforcing major defects in our educational system and of compounding inequities in our social and economic structure."

The educator, William R. Keast, objected to the present deferral system on the grounds that:

--Grading systems vary widely from instructor to instructor and from department to department.

-Distinctions based on the fifth figure after the decimal point on a grade point average are meaningless.

STATE

--The instructor-student relationship suffers. Some instructors will be too lenient. Some students will choose only mickey mouse courses. Others will concentrate on pleasing the instructor, rather than questioning his assertions.

Thousands of students in the lower half of their freshman classes, in the lower third of their sophomore classes, or in the lower quarter of their junior classes undoubtedly whispered "Amen, brother," when they read about Keast's academic objections.

Nevertheless, this Saturday thousands of them, including some on the MSU campus, will take part in 1966's contribution to the Selective Service System, the draft-deferral examination.

And while they are taking the examination, pamphleteers from the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) will be standing outside the classroom doors, waiting to hand out literature which objects to the student-deferral system on political and social grounds.

SDS objects to the system because it "provides cannon fodder for an immoral war," and because it "discriminates against lower economic and social classes and in favor of white, middle class youth."

The University of Michigan announced a new policy this spring which was based on both academic and political considerations. At the request of many faculty members, U of M officials said that they would refuse to give out class standings.

But Selective Service officials said that if the U of M didn't change its mind, its students would probably be drafted.

Tuesday U of M changed its mind.

'Don't Change Draft Laws'

WASHINGTON (UPI)--Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey told Congress Thursday that he opposed any changes in the draft law but favored Vol. 59, Number 3 lowering standards to make more men eligible for induction.

The 72-year-old Selective Service director noted that the physical, educational and moral requirements for military service could be lowered by the Defense Dept. without requiring a revision in the law.

Hershey, testifying before the House Armed Services Committee, summed up his views with this statement: "I would not recommend any changes in the draft law. I would recommend * that we apply it to more and . more people.

It was the second day of testimony for the gray-haired general at a congressional review of the Selective Service System touched off by charges of inequities in the draft program.

In addition to lowering standards, Hershey said he would not mind being pushed by the committee into studying the possibility of drafting men, who had received deferments, after they reach 26, which is not done now. He said he was against a suggestion by Chairman L. Mendel Rivers, D-S.C., that the eligibility cutoff age be lowered "substantially" below 26.

Philosophically, Hershey made it clear he thought service in the military was good for young men and that he liked the idea of inducting nearly every physically capable man.

Hannah said he did not come out in favor of the ordinance because he "thought sure it would pass."

He added that he did not write a letter of support for the ordinance to the East Lansing Human Relations Commission, sponsors of the measure, because "it never occurred to me."

Five vehicles arein operation. There are two each on the Brody-Fee and Spartan Village routes and one serving the Commuter lot route.

Bus passes for the full summer term are priced at $12, while those for each half-term are $6. Commuter passes are also available at $6. This rate union and shipowners met for is for both the full and halfterm.

Henry Jolman, head of the bus system, said that the summer service is provided chiefly for tlement. Both sides agreed to the large number of older people attending classes.

Operation is identical to last ning service. Last year, four buses were running from 7:30 ; a.m.-12:30 p.m. Saturdays, but now a low average of 50 passengers caused the operation to be discontinued.

The system now has a total of 20 buses, 19 of which are owned by the University, while one is leased. Seventeen vehicles were in operation fall term. Union Recognition Is Significant Step

MSU TOOK AN historic and enlightened step when it signed, without incident, a contract with the American Federation of State County and Municipal Employees Union, AFL-CIO Local 1585 representing 1,800-2,000 non-academic employees on campus.

The final signing culminated seven months of negotiating between the MSU management committee and representatives of the union. Since last October, when the University first recognized the union after it gained a majority in the Grounds and Maintenance Dept., Local 1585 has rapidly grown.

MSU MADE NO attempt to obstruct the union in its attempt to organize non-academic employees. Contrary to the example given by MSU, the University of Michigan refused to recognize a similar union on its campus and is now hotly contesting the issue in court.

Public employees who hold jobs similar to ones in provate industry often have been neglected or have received inferior wages and benefits. Among public employees, unions are many times either nonexistent or ineffective--often because of legal restrictions.

BUT WITH THE amendment of the Michigan Employment Act (Hutchinson Act) last summer, the organization of public employees in Michigan has been facilitated, and rightly so. For there is no reason why public employees shouldn't have the opportunity to organize a union and bargain collectively.

But there are also several potential problems resulting from the contract signed by the University and the union. First, though it is still illegal for public employees to strike, in recent months, newly organized teachers' unions in the Detroit area have struck in numerous school systems

THE QUESTION OF whether members of local 1585 will choose to strike on campus will remain speculative until the University and the union reach their first impasse in negotiation. For example, if union members chose to strike, what would be the result when all members of the Dormitory and Food Services Dept. walked off their jobs? The situation would be chaotic.

A possible way to avoid such an impasse would be to add binding arbitration to the University-union agreement, not only over interpretation of the contract, as is presently the case, but also over provisions of the contract itself. To insure that collective bargaining isn't eliminated by falling back on arbitration each time a disagreement exists, it should be made available only as a last resort. This could be accomplished by charging both parties a high enough fee to deter them from resorting to arbitration in other than exceptional situations.

ANOTHER QUESTION TO be raised is the possible effect the new union will have on board and room and tuition fees for students. It is generally agreed that the union will help members obtain higher wage and fringe benefits.

We wonder, if the union is successful and wins many of its present and future demands, how else can these increasing costs be compensated for other than shifting at least part of the burden to students?

THE SIGNING OF the union contract was a significant step forward for non-academic employees and also for this University. But like all pioneering efforts, precedents will have to be set and new problems will arise, Let's hope that future negotiation between the University and the union will be as smooth as the first.

Capitol Villa Bans Students

Because student tenants are "too destructive" Capitol Villa Apartments, 1724 E. Grand River will not accept student leases for the approaching academic year.

Mrs. Fred Hawkins, wife of the resident manager and spokesman in her husband's absence said that the "apartments were almost ruined."

When asked for a confirmation or denial that damages reached $800 in one unit, she replied, "We have our own reasons for not leasing to students."

Students said that upon occasion motor bikes were ridden through the halls and into walls. The manager would not comment.

Patrick Smith, the director of the Off-Campus Housing Office and advisor to both Off-Campus Council and Off-Campus Housing Commission said he unofficially knew about damages but has not received an official complaint through the University or statement from the apartment owner or students who have lived there.

Smith said that to his knowledge Capitol Villa has a Detroit owner who has had his first experience with student tenants at MSU the past two years.

Genevieve Helmer, one-time beautician turned campus cop, uickly surveyed the situation, scrawled out another ticket and slapped it on the car windshield.

It was one of 75 parking tickets she averages during a typical law-enforcing day.

"I don't get any real thrill out of giving tickets," she told me while strolling through the parking lot.

"I never give out a ticket unless I know THEY are wrong." The two-way Handi-talkie radio phone, slung low on her hip, blared out dispatches incessantly from the University Police headquarters as she continued the patrol.

"There's a lot of people who think we get some sort of commission for every ticket we write out. Well, it just isn't true. I get my pay whether I write a ticket or not."

She spotted a sedan with an expired parking permit on the rear windshield and rushed over to inspect it.

"June 1965," she read aloud softly. "You see it's things like this I have to watch for."

Genevieve began writing another ticket.

"It took me awhile to learn how to write a perfect ticket. One that's readable, rain or shine. I don't think everyone could handle this job," she declared proudly.

Genevieve had to train for her job like everyone else on the force. She had to learn how to properly fill-out a parking ticket, where to put it and so forth.

She proceeded to instruct me on how to complete an ordinance violation summons properly. She read every item aloud:

"License number. You keep your eye on the plate so you don't copy the wrong number. That would be terrible.

'Date, 6,22,66--place of violation, is it a two-door or fourdoor?, the type of violation--you check it in this little box here-and, of course, the ordinance section number."

She placed it snuggly under the windshield wiper for the unsuspecting owner.

It's not that Genevieve didn't like designing women's glamorous hairstyles. She did it for 20 years in Lansing.

But it's the challenge of this lonely job of law enforcement that attracted her. It's not every woman gets the opportunity to keep the peace.

"Being a beautician was very skilled work," she explained. "You have to do well or your customers won't come back." But she had this "thing" about being a policewoman, so when the opportunity presented itself a couple of years ago she followed through with it.

Genevieve has been diligent Patrolwoman No. 2 ever since Patrolwoman No. 1 was a softie and quit because the winters were too cold.

And don't ever call her a meter maid. She's a full-fledged patrolwoman, complete with police whistle, shiny badges (two of SAIGON (UPI)--American artillery and air strikes directed by a turncoat North Vietnamese lieutenant smashed the remnants of a Communist battalion Thursday but a battle in the coastal jungles grew steadily in intensity. Americans and Communists threw in reinforcements.

A U.S. spokesman estimated that troops in this phase of Operation Nathan Hale 240 miles northeast of Saigon had killed 380 Communists, at least 53 of them Thursday. South Vietnamese troops, in another major victory farther north near the border of North Viet Nam, killed 312 and captured 40.

State Closes For Summer

The State Theater, a local exponent of foreign and art films, announced Thursday it is closing for the summer effective June 30.

The Negro free on bond in the wounding of a white man was C.O.

Chinn. He was accused of chasing down and shooting a white who allegedly threw a smoke or fire-police.

The closing, according to manager J.O. Smith, is a theater policy prompted by the usually poorer summer attendance. He said it would reopen the second of third week in September.

However, Smith noted, MSU's increasing summer term enrollments, and a growing interest in foreign films, may prevent future summer shutdowns.

Parishoners of People's Church will continue worshipping at the theater while their church, which was gutted by fire in February, 1965, completes reconstruction.

Board To Aid ASMSU

Summer

A Summer Supervisory Committee will act on behalf of the Student Board of the Associated Students of MSU this term. It was established May 31 at the last meeting of the Student Board.

The committee is composed of Greg Hopkins, president of Off-Campus Council; Cliff Kolbus. comptroller; and Art Tung, Student Board member-at-large, who is acting as chairman.

"The main purpose of the committee is to continue the work of ASMSU," Tung said, "and to reevaluate ourselves, decide where we'd like to go as far as we as individuals are concerned, not as a board.

Among the projects the committee will work on this summer are the plans for ASMSU's Welcome Week Night, the Student Handbook, the Student Leadership Conference and an orientation program to be presented at the summer counseling clinics. No student loans will be made this term

At stake in the two-day competition at Downing Stadium on Randall's Island are berths on America's international teams. along with the national titles.

Steele, who as a sophomore ran the 120 highs and 330 intermediates, began his second season in the new 440 event with a winning time of 0:50.3. in the Ohio Relays.

His 10 wins in 11 starts include the Big Ten title, earned on a 0:50.7 clocking, a victory in the Central Collegiates with a time of 0:50.8, and the NCAA crown, coming on a 0:50.4 clocking.

Steele set the world record in a semifinal heat at the nationals with a sizzling 0:50.1. his best time to date.

His only loss this year came in the Drake Relays, the second time he ran the event. He finished fourth in 0:52.5.

In the NCAA finals, Steele's next two finishers were separated by a slight three seconds each.

State's assistant track coach, Jim Gibbard, said that Bob has developed to the point now where he has suddenly relized how good he can be. He cited Steele's consistency in recent outings in the Big Ten, Central Collegiates and NCAA meets.

"Do you get much criticism or wisecracks from the students?" I asked.

"No, not really," she replied shaking her head. "There was this one young fellow, though, that was disturbed because he had received so many tickets and I had given him another. He was really upset... I don't know why.'

She gave the lot one last quick inspection.

"We're not going to give too many tickets today," she said. "It wouldn't be fair -- what with the new students parking here for summer registration, you know."

"But giving people tickets never bothers me because everyone I give a ticket to, I know is guilty," she said confidently with arms akimbo.

"The idea of this job is not just to give tickets, but to keep things under control. And that's what I'm here for, to keep things under control."

Allan F. Smith, U of M vice president for academic affairs, said that the rankings of all students who do not request that this data be withheld will be released to the Selective Service System July 8.

How does Michigan State University answer the moral and academic questions raised by the present system of deferring college students from the draft?

"I think our system places the responsibility on the individual student, where it belongs," said President John A. Hannah Thursday afternoon.

"If he wants the University to send the information to his draft board, then he just has to ask us to send it. If he later wants us to withhold information, he makes a written request to stop sending the information, and the University honors this request also." The University's policy is based on past practice and on a report issued March 17 by Logan Wilson, president of the American Council on Education (ACE). The ACE is a body formed by national and regional education (RCD). The real is a budy to be budy in a budy and regional education associations and institutions of higher learning in 1918. The ACE's Commission on Federal Relations made its recommendations after consultation with Selective Service officials and the American Association of Admissions of Admissions Officers and Registrars.

One example of the ACE recommendations is its definition of full-time and part-time students. Full-time students are those undergraduates taking at least 12 credits, and doctoral candidates taking at least 6 credits, says the ACE.

Michigan State has accepted this and other recommendations with certain modifications.

Registrar Horace C. King explained how MSU's system works. During fall term registration all male students are given a Selective Service Information Card. If the student doesn't want the University to report his status (full- or part-time) or standing (class rank) to his local draft board, he simply does not complete the card.

If he does sign the card, the University will release all information concerning the student which the Selective Service requests during the year. Each fall the student is given a fresh choice as to whether or not he wants the information released.

During the lull following the Korean War, the draft boards usually just wanted to know whether or not the student was going to school full-time. They still do, and the ACE's 12-9-6 credit guidelines are followed.

Another factor is "normal progress toward a degree." Normally this would mean full-time study, but extenuating circumstances, such as a program which includes a great deal of research and only a few credits, are also allowed for. In fact, Michigan State adopted a special review plan for graduate students this February at the recommendation of a special committee.

The committee--made up of Milton E. Muelder, dean of the school for advanced graduate studies; John A. Fuzak, vice president for student affairs; and the assistant deans of the academic colleges-recommended an automatic review system for graduate students. Lists of all part-time students are now sent to each of the colleges. If the college decides that the student should be deferred, it sends a statement to the Registrar's office, which forwards it to the student's draft board.

Early this year the Selective Service System announced that it wanted colleges to give class standings at the end of the school year to local draft boards as an additional aid for decisions on deferrals.

Some schools said they would refuse to give data. Others, such as the University of Chicago, said that they would give it out, and were immediatey picketed and sat-in upon by protesters.

Others, such as Wayne State University, said they would give the information this year, but not next year. These schools may have been banking upon changes in the system before next year's summer deadline. Hearings in Washington this week are one sign of growing discontent with the present system.

MSU, which already had its system of permissions set up, decided to give the data on class standing, since students who object to having data released can request that it be withheld.

There's a catch, however. If a student asks in writing that information be withheld, the University does notify the local draft board that it is no longer sending the information.

What are MSU class standings based on?

King said that the grade point averages of all male undergraduates who are in a degree program full-time from September to June are compiled.

Thus coeds who nobly flunk courses so that their boy friends can have higher class ranking are making a rather meaningless gesture.

Included in the standings, but not included in the lists sent to local draft boards, are students who did not sign a permission card in the fall, students who did sign but later requested that the information be withheld, and students who didn't go full-time for all three terms.

MSU compiles grade point averages on an all-University basis within each class; Wayne State lists the standings within each of its colleges. MSU students must give positive permission before information is released; Michigan students, because of this week's policy reversal, must request that information be withheld. Otherwise, the state's three major universities follow substantially the same system.

Nobody believes that it's a perfect system, just as nobody believes that the Selective Service System is perfect.

Administrators, faculty members and students in Detroit, Ann Arbor and East Lansing should be watching Washington with interest this week and next, as the House Armed Services Committee conducts public hearings on the draft.

New York Snubbing Arab King

NEW YORK (UPI)--Mayor John V. Lindsay abruptly cancelled an official reception and dinner honoring King Faisal of Saudi Arabia Thursday in response to the Arab head of state's comment that Jews are "our enemy." It was later announced that the city would not even have an official greeter on hand when the king arrives. Asked whether anyone representing the city would be there, a city hall spokesman replied: "No, nobody." Coming only a few hours before the king and his party were due to arrive for a seven-day visit, Lindsay's move was followed by an angry statement from Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller who cancelled his courtesy call with Faisal, scheduled for Friday.

It was the second time in recent years the nation's largest city-which has a Jewish population of more than two million--has snubbed a Saudi Arabian head of state. In 1957, Mayor Robert F. Wagner brought on an international incident involving Faisal's predecessor, King Saud.
