Calm prevails under shell fire at inauguration

By GEORGE MCARTHUR Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (P) -- In time of peace it could have been a fireworks display to amuse President Nguyen Van Thieu, Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey and 2,000 other guests at the inaugural reception. But this is a time of war, and it was the real thing. Viet Cong mortars landing just 150 yards from the brightly lighted ballroom caused the sharp explosions and the flashes in the night sky.

The blasts brought a sudden halt to the conversations. But the band kept playing an American tune without missing a note.

It was 7:35 p.m. Humphrey, in a natty dinner jacket with embroidered lapels, had just entered the glowing ballroom of South Vietnam's Independence Palace for a reception honoring the nation's newly inaugurated president.

With U.S. Ambassador Ellsworth Bunker, Humphrey moved across the redflowered carpet toward the center of the Three sharp explosions reverberated at that moment. Outside the southern windows, the night sky lit up, three times in quick succession.

Humphrey paused in a conversation with Bunker, then calmly resumed the chat. Gen. William C. Westmoreland, the U.S. commander in Metnam, glanced at the windows, his hands behind his back in pensive pose, then also resumed his conversation.

"Those are probably mortar shells," a correspondent said to Humphrey. And Humphrey replied: "I gathered they might be."

In seconds the gala reception given by Thieu was as gay as before. Only outside was the damage apparent.

Three 60mm mortar shells, fired from a seedy district toward Saigon's waterfront, has raked the palace grounds. With the new president was vice president Nguyen Cao Ky. Besides Westmoreland, and Bunker, the commander of the U.S. Air Force in Vietnam. Gen. William Momyer, was present with most of his top staff. The Australian Foreign Minister, Paul Hasluck, had just entered. The prime minister of South Korea, Chung II Kwon, and the foreign secretary of the Philippines, Narcisco Ramos, were standing on the

When the house was found where the mortar was fired, three more unexpended shells were by the tube.

The three shells had been fired in a slight, drizzling rain and the low clouds magnified the explosions inside the palace. A fourth round fell outside the palace grounds.

Their total damage was two automobiles scarred and three persons wounded. The cars belonged to Australian Maj. Gen. Douglas Vincent and U.S. Rear Adm. Kenneth Veth, the commander of American naval forces in Vietnam. Veth's driver was one of those wounded.

The first man to see the explosions was an American Secret Service guard for Humphrey, posted on the southern portico of the ballroom.

With magnificent aplomb, the vice presi-

The agreement reported by Atlantic Alliance sources removes one obstacle to the treaty. But the United States must now go to Geneva and try to gain Soviet acceptance of the principles proposed by the five members of Euratom, the European Atomic Energy Commission.

U.S. sources said, "We have the green light to resume negotiations with the U.S.S.R. on our own responsibility on a no commitment basis.

France is also a member of Euratom, but President Charles de Gaulle wants no part of the nuclear treaty and France has said it will refuse to sign. De Gaulle sees the treaty as a symbol of what he calls "the hegemony of the superpowers." The agreement was reached at the

Grad students elected to faculty committees

By LINDA GORTMAKER State News Staff Writer

Graduate students have been elected to non-voting membership for interim terms on five faculty standing committees.

Five students were selected from 60 nominees representing students from 12 colleges at an organizational meeting last

Graduate students became eligible for membership last spring when the Academic Council approved the addition of one graduate student and one undergraduate student to faculty committees on education policies, student affairs, curriculum, library and international programs. Students elected include Harley Thomas, forest products major, on the Educational Policies Committee; Glen Peterson, student personnel major, on the Student Affairs Committee.

Also, John Leary, botany major, Curriculum, E. Leonard Brown, geography major, Library; and George Metcalfe, economics major, International Projects.

The Office of Advanced Graduate Studies handled the selection of these students, since no student organization presently represents MSU's 7,661 graduate students.

Interim terms for elected students mean that students "will serve to the end of the school year or until a graduate organization can supplement them with more representatives," according to John G. Hocking, professor of mathematics who chaired the organizational meeting.

Hocking, also chairman of the Committee on Graduate Student Affairs, a newly-formed subcommittee of the Academic Council, stressed that the 35 nominees attending the meeting "received no guidance or help from me." "I only chaired it and kept it from degenerating into a talk session, 'he said. Students were elected on a "non-democratic" basis because of the lack of a graduate student organization. Jacob C. Vinocur, associate dean of advanced graduate studies, contacted the deans of 12 colleges and asked them each to submit five names, one per committee.

At last week's meeting, each group of nominees representing each committee elected a group chairman and designated him as the graduate student representative to the standing faculty committee.

The other four nominees for each committee will serve as a constituency and advise the representative, Hocking said. These groups suggested that the future graduate student organization adopt a committee structure of five standing committees and work with the graduate representatives on the faculty committees. Hocking said he was "pleased" with the organizational set-up and said that Stuart Bremer, social science graduate student and chairman of the future graduate student organization, agreed.

The recommendation to include graduate students on the faculty standing committees was announced at the June 6 meeting of the Academic Council and surprised Milton E. Muelder, dean of advanced graduate studies.

Bernard F. Engel, chairman of the Committee on Committees, who made the recommendation, said the idea was based upon the growing number of graduate students and the growing importance of thegraduate school.

Long fight ahead for abortion law

By TIM O'BRIEN State News Staff Writer

Those who have been urging a new state abortion law apparently have a bigger job before them than behind them.

The latest bid for new abortion legislation is now hopelessly bogged down in a legislative study committee, with no chance of getting out this year.

The bill, which would liberalize the present abortion law may not even be out of that committee for the 1968 legislative session.

The bill is sponsored by State Sen. John McCauley, D-Wyandotte. In essence, it would allow for the termination of pregnancy in the case of rape, incest or where the physical or mental health of the mother would be endangered.

The current Michigan statute permits the temination of pregnancy only when the life of the mother is at stake.

The McCauley proposal would also permit both men and women to be sterilized. Physical or mental health, or family economy would constitute "substantial ground for the operation," says McCauley.

The history of the McCauley bill, starting with its introduction in the legislature March 7, is filled with controversy. NEWS BACKGROUND

The heart of the opposition has been opposition is Archbishop John F. Dearden of Detroit.

Archbishop Dearden recently released a letter to be read from the pulpit of all Catholic churches in the archdiocese.

The letter read, in part: "We realize that some who advocate abortion do so in a sincere attempt to solve human problems." He added, "but they do not see enough. They do not see the full

The Catholic Church theorizes that the person begins to exist, and takes on a soul, at the moment of conception.

Dearden said passage of an abortion liberalizing bill would "begin an erosion which could gradually work its way to undermine the value of the life of an incurably ill person who may have lived longer than is thought justified in terms of the good society."

What effects Dearden's view has had cannot be accurately gauged, but a group of Catholic legislators did form their own secret clique in Lansing to block any new abortion proposal. Although the most vocal opposition came from the church, an equal if not bigger adversary was presented by the Michigan Supreme Court. The court ruled that a 10-week old fetus is a person with a right to sue for damages because of the loss of a father through wrongful death (LaBlue v. Specker, 358 Mich. 558). The court determined and held that life exists in the fetus and a person came into being, legally, at the time of conception. The view concurred generally, although not technically, with that of the Roman Catholic Church.

Backers of the McCauley proposal weighted their argument heavily with statistics rather than legal or moral judgments. Their efforts were to show that new abortion legislation is "not only what the people need, but what they want."

Among the surveys they presented was a Gallup Poll in which about 80 per cent of those contacted favored legal abortion for the reasons of the mother's health, rather than just her life. A majority favored legalized abortion in cases where the child may be deformed. About 72 per cent did NOT favor legal abortion in cases where the family cannot support additional children.

McCauley says that if the national trend is any indication, medical support for new abortion legislation in Michigan would be staggering.

According to a survey conducted by "Modern Medicine" magazine, 86.9 per cent of 40,000 doctors participating supported more liberal abortion legislation. Of those who identified themselves as Roman Catholics, 49.1 per cent answered that they were in favor of broadening the legal grounds for therapeutic abortion. This view was taken by 93.3 percent of the non-Catholic doctors who answered. The Michigan Medical Society also has endorsed the McCauley proposal. Sen. McCauley said that according to State Police statistics, illegal operations are on the increase while legal ter-

Justice Dept. reveals proposal to split GM

WASHINGTON P -- The Justice Department conceded Tuesday that it has had in its files for 16 months a rough draft of a proposal that could ask a court to order the breakup of the world's largest industrial corporation, General Motors. However, department officials described the document as only a sample complaint drawn up as part of a lengthy investigation of the automobile industry. They said there has been no decision whether, if ever, the government will petition the courts to order the breakup

At the White House, press secretary George Christian said, in response to questions, that "no matter of this kind has ever been brought to the President's attention." He added: "The President's alleged involvement in it is pure imagination.

The Justice Department statements and the quick White House comments were reaction to a Wall Street Journal story that said President Johnson is in a dilemma over whether to file a suitagainst GM.

The Journal said Johnson risks the enmity of GM's 1.4 million stockholders and outraging the business community if he proceeds with the suit. On the other hand, the Journal said, if he suppresses it, he risks enraging intellectuals, trade unionists and his own anti-trust lawyers. statements in the matter, a three-sentence statement during the morning was later expanded to six paragraphs.

The original statement said, "the automobile industry has been under study by the Antitrust Division for many years. The study is but one of scores of industry studies undertaken by the division. Many of these studies do not lead to litigation or even to the consideration of litigation.'

The statement said it is common practice during the course of these studies for lawyers to draft complaints. It said such an internal draft "was prepared by an Antitrust Division lawyer in the automobile industry study" 16 months ago.

The Justice Department's expanded statement said that neither evaluation nor processing of its automobile industry study has been completed.

December draft call down from last year

LANSING (UPI) -- The Michigan Selective Service today issued a December draft call for 1,359 men, but in a burst of early Christmas spirit said they could all go home for Christmas. An additional 4,000 men will be ordered for pre-induction physical examinations during December to determine their acceptability for military service.

The December call raises the total induction for the year to 14,621 compared to 23,241 during 1966, one of the heaviest draft years since the Korean conflict broke out in 1951.

Col. Arthur A. Holmes, state selective service director, explained that even-numbered years have higher draft calls than odd-numbered years because of the two-year enlistment cycle which began when the bulk of fighting men were called to Korean More men will be called next year, Holmes said. "We have received information from our national headquarters that we should he prepared because calls after the first of the year will be heavier," he said. He said the "build up in Vietnam" plus the even-numbered year factor were responsible. During the first nine months of 1967, 27,290 men have either been drafted or have enlisted in the armed services.

The bulk of the draftees will come from Wayne County during December, as is normal. Wayne County will contribute 462 men, while other counties will send 897.

Foreign study: contrast in programs

Two groups of students who have studied abroad, one on programs sponsored by the American Language and Educational Center (AM-LEC), the other sponsored by Justin Morrill College, have recently engaged in discussion of their programs.

The conclusions they reached should be of interest to everyone in the University community.

The JMC group regarded their overseas experience as stimulating, and remain very enthusiastic about it. The AMLEC group was disappointed with their overseas

London stated, "The whole program would have been more interesting if it had been informal and more imaginative."

While the JMC students stressed the importance of personal interaction on their trips, the AMLEC students felt this was an important factor lacking in their experience.

One cannot help but note the enthusiasm with which the JMC students viewed their foreign experience. They have done something that truly affected their selves and their education.

The JMC programs struck a vital chord in their participants, where the AMLEC programs did not. What was AMLEC's problem?

Many participants felt that definite prerequisites would have made their tour more meaningful. Many felt that the course content did not incorporate the local culture and political situation

But, whatever the problems were, it is important that they be solved. AMLEC is the major sponsor of overseas study for MSU students, where the JMC programs are not completely open to the student body.

Foreign study is becoming increasingly important today, and it seems that MSU has to some degree neglected student programs in this. area, while, at the same time, devoting much of its resources to technological aid programs.

A full evaluation of MSU's foreign study programs is needed to discover and correct weaknesses. Hopefully, this could be done before next summer, when another large group of students will set out to have a full foreign experience.

The new age of nonsense

WASHINGTON--"This is where we came in, for God's sake!" Any traveler returning to the United States at this juncture, who is also old enough to remember the nonsense-ridden '30s, cannot easily repress the foregoing horrified exclamation.

In the '30s, the younger generation of Americans, and all those older men who hankered to be "in the movement," had briskly rejected the whole experience of the past. The result was drivelling nonsense about the Communist Party; nonsense about the causes of wars, resulting in the idiotic Nye Neutrality Act and nonsense in general about the role of power

The same sort of plunge into nonsense clearly threatens in America today.

Take the scores of eminent anti-Johnson Democrats--historians and collegeprofessors, journalists and senators, all remorselessly articulate--who were already active in the era of President Harry S. Truman. Not a one of them that you can think of failed to support President Truman's decision to intervene in Korea. Just about all of them have gone on, ever since, rightly praising his wisdom and courage on that occasion.

If these distinguished liberal Democrats, who supported Mr. Truman and now vilify President Johnson, can make any distinction at all between the Korean and Vietnamese wars, they have yet to say what it is. In Korea we were fighting on the Asian mainland, as we are today; and in Korea, too, mainly because of Gen. Douglas MacArthur, we had to meet Chinese as well as North Korean man-

In Korea again, there were two primary stakes that the United States was engaged to defend. First, there was the American position as a Pacific power. During World War II, blood and treasure had been lavishly poured out to defend and strengthen this American position. It was, and is, of cardinal importance.

President Truman rightly recognized that the whole Pacific position would be irrevocably compromised if the Korean challenge were not met. In play was not Korea alone, but the future alignment of Japan and the Philippines, the eventual tendency of Southeast Asia and, in fact, the direction of the bandwagon of history in the whole of Asia.

On the same subject, just 15 years later, Gen. Maxwell Taylor accurately told Mr. Johnson that he had the choice between meeting the challenge in Vietnam or being thrown "back to Hawaii." And surely this first stake, this American position in the Pacific, when Taylor gave this advice, deserved even greater consideration since we already had fought a second major war in its defense.

As for stake No. 2, it was, and is, quite simply the credibility of American commitments, such as our pledges to the South Vietnamese, the Thais and a good many other people in the present instance. This stake was far less important in Korea, which we had publicly put on its own, than it was in Vietnam. But either way, the great power that enters into pledges and then chooses to ignore them has taken a road that may at first seem smooth, but will always turn cruelly rocky and downhill in the end.

There is a third stake, too, in the Vietnamese war that was really invisible in the Korean war. The Pacific, in brief, now promises to become another "world lake" quite as important as the Atlantic, if not more important. But this vast process, so greatly enhancing the significance of stakes I and II, requires a further, more detailed report.

How, then, can these distinguished liberal Democrats talk out of one side of their mouths about Korea, and out of the other side about Vietnam? None has tackled that question with sober honesty, with the sole, highly honorable exception of Richard Rovere in The New Yorker; and Rovere's attempt to offer an answer would satisfy no one searching for a serious

MITCH MILLER Court favors state

Since 1954 at least, the Supreme Court has made a series of decisions which have changed American life to a degree not felt since the first ten amendments were added to the Constitution.

It is hard to find the common denominator of all the decisions. Many people would say that the court has been moving in the direction of increasing and protecting the civil and criminal rights of all

While many of the Court's actions can be viewed in that light, it is difficult to see, for example, how freedom of religion is guaranteed by prohibiting any exercise of religion in the public schools.

Such decisions have resulted in widespread dissatisfaction with the Court. Groups ranging in purpose and color from the John Birch Society to the Fraternal Order of Police to the American Civil Liberties Union have been disgruntled with various decisions of the Court.

While most of these complaints stem from particular court rulings opposed to some group's interest, the Court has on occasion made decisions which seem inconsistent with its apparent goal of expanding and protecting the rights of the

Especially in cases involving an individual and a government body or agency, the court has been inclined to side with the government rather than the individual.

Perhaps this reflects the growing power of the administrative branch of the government, and the necessity for an individual to follow not only laws, but regulations, orders, edicts, and directives in order for our complex society to operate. Yet one cannot help being puzzled and somewhat dismayed after reading of such decisions as the one which abrogated an ancient treaty between the United States and the Onondaga Indians, forcing them off the last remnant of their lands to make way for a dam. Dams are necessary, surely. But to break a treaty with a once-mighty nation simply to operate a few more electric toothbrushes is to deny our existence as an honorable nation.

Perhaps national honor is a thing of the past. What then of our obligation to rectify our atrocious conduct toward the original inhabitants of this land? Does , progress mean justice is ignored, just because the Onondaga can no longer oppose our physical power. Similarly, certain of last Monday's rulings by the court leave a sense of disquiet in their wake.

At the same time that the Court agreed to hear a Justice Department request for power to institute criminal proceedings in civil rights cases, and gave several Danish nudist magazines, some apparently designed to appeal to homosexuals, protection from seizure by the government, it denied Leroy Garber, an Amish farmer, a hearing to consider whether he could refuse to send his daughter to a public school on religious grounds.

The Amish do not want to change, alter or abolish American society. They have no ax to grind. They just do not wish to participate in the cacaphony of modern life. (Sometimes I find it difficult to disagree with their stand.)

No matter how much the country has changed, they still have the right to practice their religion, live their lives as their conscience dictates, and be left alone by the State.

Their ancestors came to this country seeking freedom to live as they chose. If the Amish are not to be allowed to continue to do so, simply because their ways do not seem modern to many people, then we had better make explicitly clear that no right can stand in the way of

If hippies, and homosexual Danish nudists, and criminals, can live their lives without interference, why are the Amish forbidden to do so?

Religion not necessary for CO

I would like to congratulate Wesley Hills and Jim Roos for their presentation of "Student Draft Regulations . . . " in the October 26 issue of Collage. However, the following statement on conscientious objection attributed to Col. W. J. Meyers is misleading: "...conscientious objectors must be able to prove a history of religious training and belief if they wish to be seriously considered." There are 61 religious groups recognized by draft boards in considering conscientious objection. These may be found in "Statements of Religious Bodies on the Conscientious Objector" Revised, 1963.

Too much?

Headline in the Thursday, Oct. 26 State News reads: Two Days of Protest cost U.S. $1 million: Thought: we spend that much in Vietnam every 15 minutes.

Harold Hart Professor of Chemistry of the 61 religious groups is necessary to be recognized as a conscientious objector. This is not in fact the case.

The Supreme Court has stated that church membership is not a requirement for recognition as a conscientious objector. In the Seeger decision of March 8, 1965 the Court said that unconventional and personal beliefs are to be considered religious. Writing for the majority, Justice Clark said, "It must be remembered that in resolving these exemption problems one deals with the beliefs of different individuals who will articulate them in a multitude of ways. In such an intensely personal area, of course, the claim of the registrant that his belief is an essential part of a religious faith must be given great weight . . .

Men with unorthodox beliefs should not be deterred from attempting to gain recognition of their conscientious objection to

Wallabies used in study

Out of state students may complain about Michigan weather, but for eight Tasmanian wallabies the weather is reminiscent of their native habitat.

John I. Johnson, associate professor of zoology, biophysics and psychology, has begun a colony of the furry Australian animals in order to study the effects of embryonic changes on brain development and behavior.

"We are trying to see if it is possible to alter patterns of brain development by manipulation during early stages," Johnson said.

Wallabies and other animals with pouches are suited for such study because young marsupials develop outside the female parent's body cavity. An infant is "born" into his mother's stomach pouch after a fertilized egg has developed for two weeks.

"You can't tell if a young wallaby is in there until it is big enough to move around in the pouch," Johnson said.

Wallabies were chosen for the project because they are smaller, only. have longer fur and are more accustomed to cold temperatures and snow than their kangaroo relatives. Tasmanian winters average only 10 to 20 degrees warmer than Michigan winters.

Of its stars, only Olivia de Havilland is still alive. Clark Gable, Vivian Leigh and Leslie Howard are gone, but a studio spokesman says: "Their passing doesn't seem to have one whit of effect. It's bigger than anything we've had in years."

Studios generally avoid releasing a film too soon after the star's death for fear of seeming to commercialize. Spencer Tracy died last June, but "Guess Who's Coming to Dinner" won't be shown until December and Columbia won't advertise it as his last film.

Cult followings gave Rudolph Valentino and James Dean bigger popularity in death than in life. But stars' last pictures also can fail.

Examples: Jean Harlow's "Saratoga," completed with a double after she died; Gable's "The Misfits" and Montgomery Clift's "The Defector."

But a successful movie defies death. And some actors don't die or--unlike old soldiers--even fade away.

We need graduates with degrees in math, business administration, and finance, in languages and law.

A call of this kind may sound odd coming from a bank. But maybe you don't know as much about the banking business as you think you do. At least about our kind of banking business.

Around here the business is changing all the time. We don't allow it to stand still. We're constantly taking a fresh look at old methods and revising or discarding or coming up with new ideas. And we're continually becoming more involved in more and more fields of business. And while all this is going on, we're growing, growing faster than any other large bank in the nation.* Obviously a growing concern offers an ever increasing amount of opportunity in a variety of positions.

before answering. No, we don't need test drivers right now, but-Do you see what we mean?

Think about it. If you're soon to get your degree and have an imagination and like to think, we'd very much like to talk to you. Ask your placement counselor to set up an appointment when the man from BC comes to call.

He'll be on campus Wednesday, November 8.
