MSU students believe Nixon covered scandal

By NANCY CRANE
State News Staff Writer

The President may not have planned the Watergate break-in said several students interviewed by the State News Tuesday. However, they believe President Nixon did try to cover up the affair.

About 15 students were interviewed for impressions on the Watergate affair.

Michael Griffith, Cleveland, Ohio, graduate student, said, "I think President Nixon knew about the cover-up (of the break-in)."

"Anyway, he's incompetent as president whether he knew or didn't know," Griffith said. "If he did know, he was obviously engaging in illegal activities. If he didn't know, then what kind of President would allow mass subterfuge among his subordinates?"

Michael Johnson, St. Joseph senior, said that though the President may have been involved in the Watergate affair, people should give Nixon every benefit of the doubt before they pass judgement on him.

Johnson said he is sympathetic toward Nixon because, "in his own blundering way it seems as if he would do something for the country."

Johnson also said that most people are tired of hearing about Watergate. Gail Floyd, Detroit senior, agreed with Johnson, adding: "I don't believe you can trust the government. It's possible that the Democrats have as much corruption (as the Republicans). You can never believe what you're told."

Most of the students interviewed believed that the Senate hearings on Watergate would uncover the truth in the Watergate incident.

Terry Prowsser, Bangkok, Thailand sophomore said, "The sub-committee is doing the best job they can. The Senators are not afraid to confront people with conflicting testimony. They have subpoenaed everybody who has been implicated."

"This, I believe justifies my faith in the Senate hearings," Prowsser concluded.

There were some students who did not have the same faith in the Senate hearings as Prowsser.

Sylvia Sharma, Okemos graduate student, said, "It is disturbing that the hearings are not court proceedings. If they were court proceedings they might get to the issues of preserving the laws."

"As it is, these proceedings are only an airing of the issues. They won't soothe the people who are afraid that their phones are bugged," Sharma said. Even though most of the students believed Nixon was probably guilty of a coverup of the Watergate break-in, most believed the President would not be impeached as a result of the case.

"I hope that there will be grounds for impeachment," James Coyle, Ludington senior, said. "However, I don't think the affair will get to the implication of Nixon. Though he's not in a very good position he has not done enough to warrant impeachment."

Coyle also said there are probably too many legal loopholes through which the President could escape prosecution for a Watergate coverup.

Some students feel that President Nixon is criminally guilty in the Watergate affair and should be punished.

Chip Kroveman, Birmingham senior, said, "I think that there is a double standard of justice involved. Nixon said the kids who went to Canada should come back to face American justice. Now Nixon should face that same justice."

Five of the 15 students approached for an interview did not have any idea of what the Watergate affair was about.

Angie Bickle, Constantine sophomore, said, "Being your atypical MSU student I don't know anything about the situation except for what I see in the State News. I don't think I could comment."

WHITE HOUSE SAYS

Nixon not to testify in bugging inquiry

FROM OUR WIRE SERVICES

The Watergate investigators will get no testimony from President Nixon, the White House said Tuesday.

"We feel it would be constitutionally inappropriate," said press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler. "It would do violence to the separation of powers."

Ziegler said the ban applies to sworn testimony, informal statements and written responses to written questions.

Meanwhile, a White House briefing, presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger acknowledged his office supplied the names of aides to be tapped in an investigation of news leaks in 1969.

Several Kissinger aides were among those whose phones were wire tapped during a 1969 investigation of a series of leaks. One of them, Kissinger said, related to the U.S. bombing of Cambodia.

Kissinger, responding to a question, said he does not intend to resign because of controversy surrounding his role in the matter.

Special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox officially began his Watergate investigation Tuesday and one of his first actions is expected to be the placement of one of his men in the U.S. attorney's office to go over evidence from the beginning.

In federal court Tuesday, Roy Sheppard was granted immunity for his testimony before the Senate committee which resumes its televised hearings June 5. Sheppard is the trucking company employee who removed cartons of documents from the White House after the Watergate breakin last year, reportedly on orders.

ASMSU hosts panelists from far and near

Robert Woodward, one of two Washington Post reporters who won the Pulitzer Prize for coverage of the Watergate affair, will speak today at a symposium sponsored by ASMSU titled "On Watergate."

Also featured at the symposium will be Rep. Paul McCloskey, R-Calif.; George Will, editor of the National Review; Walter Adams, professor of economics at MSU and Zoltan Ferency, professor of criminal justice at MSU.

The symposium will be at 3 p.m. held in the Auditorium. Admission will be $1 for students with I.D. cards and $1.50 for the general public.

Women's group upset over bills on abortions

By MAUREEN McDONALD
State News Staff Writer

A series of bills introduced in the Michigan legislature designed to regulate abortions have aroused the concern of women's rights groups.

The chief bone of contention is a bill which would permit hospitals, clinics and their employees to refuse to perform abortions.

The Senate has already overwhelmingly approved the bill and it is expected that the House will pass a similar bill.

Members of the Michigan Women's Commission, the National Organization for Women and the Michigan Women's Political Caucus are adamantly opposed to the bill.

"The bill sets a dangerous precedent for regulating medical services offered by hospitals," Pat Silea, executive director of the women's commission said Tuesday. "No legislation is necessary to allow hospitals to refuse to provide emergency care, delivery room service or sterilization operations," she said.

"Instead of passing legislation attempting to circumvent court's decision, the legislature should concern itself with the health of women in this state," Silea said.

Silea said the intent of abortion legislation has expanded into wider issues. This legislation takes a backhanded, negative attitude that the concerns of moralists are more important than that of a woman who needs the health service, she said.

The U.S. Supreme Court decision to legalize abortions in the first six months of pregnancy, made abortions a medical question between a woman and her doctor. Though the decision settled the moral question, state legislators are far from satisfied.

At least five bills have been introduced in the legislature to limit and regulate abortions in Michigan. And some of the backers of these measures were former supporters of abortion reform.

EQUAL TIME NOT GUARANTEED

Ruling made on media

By MIKE GALATOLA
State News Staff Writer

Local television stations say that Tuesday's Supreme Court ruling allowing radio and TV stations to refuse to sell broadcast time to groups wishing to air controversial issues will help stations to stay in business.

The court said in two decisions that neither the First Amendment nor federal law governing the communications industry gives those who want to air "editorial" views an absolute right to purchase broadcast time.

"To rule otherwise would make it impossible for us to function," William J. Hart, general manager of WILX-TV in Jackson, said. "Anything we would put on the air could be challenged for real or imaginary reasons, and we would have to allow those criticisms to be aired."

"What if the guy disagreeing with you doesn't have the money to buy time?" Hart said. "Then you'd have to give him free air time, and the first guy who already paid for his broadcast time would say 'Now you've got to give me free time to reply.'"

"We just wouldn't be able to deal with all the conflicting opinions," Hart said.

Harold Gross, chairman of the board of directors of Gross Telecasting, Inc., which owns WJIM-TV in Lansing, agreed with the ruling.

"I believe stations shouldn't be compelled to accept advertising on controversial issues," Gross said. "The fairness doctrine, which makes the presentation of both sides of an issue mandatory, is the best protection that can be reasonably attained."

But, echoing Chief Justice Warren E. Burger's remarks, Gross said, "The ability to spend should not be a controlling factor in the presentation of conflicting views."

Charles A. McFadden, general manager of WJRT-TV in Flint, declined to comment on how the ruling would affect the station's programming.

"We are aware of the ruling but not the details of it," McFadden said. "We don't know how it affects WJRT's policy until we've had an opportunity to review and digest the opinions."

The court held in the first decision, 4-2, that the First Amendment does not require broadcasters to accept controversial commercials. In a 6-2 vote, the court said in a second decision that the Communications Act does not require stations to sell broadcast time to groups desiring to air controversial views.

The broadcast issue was raised in 1970 when a group named Business Executives Move for Vietnam Peace was refused time to air an antiwar commercial on a Washington radio station.

The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) rejected a request by the antiwar group and by the Democratic National Committee later that year that it require broadcasters to sell time for comment on public issues.

But a U.S. Court of Appeals overturned the FCC decision in 1971, ordering the commission to work out "reasonable guidelines" on the duty of broadcasters.

Tuesday's Supreme Court ruling, in effect, reinstates the FCC's 1970 decision; the commission no longer has to develop the guidelines.

Speaking for the majority, Burger said that the lower court's ruling would unduly restrict day-to-day editorial decisions of broadcast stations by removing "journalistic discretion."

Burger warned that unrestricted access to broadcast time might allow "the views of the affluent (to) prevail over those of others, since they would have it within their power to purchase time more frequently."

Canada quits role on peace unit in Vietnam

Canada announced Tuesday its contingent of the international peace-keeping body in Vietnam will be withdrawn in 60 days.

Canada is represented on the truce supervisory force, which had never worked as well as hoped, by a 290-member force that began operations last January. Canada agreed to participate only on the condition that the commission have a reasonable chance of successful operations.

Canadian Foreign Secretary Mitchell Sharp, who announced the withdrawal, previously said the commission was not functioning as well as Canada felt necessary. The pullout had been widely rumored in Saigon.

House approves state police funds

Waste Control wraps up year of rapid growth

The Michigan House of Representatives Tuesday approved over $53 million in state funds for the state police budget for the fiscal year, beginning July 1.

One amendment to the bill provided $226,000 for AKITA, Japan (AP) — Two Tokyo schoolgirls, ages 8 and 9, were found walking along the railroad tracks in this northern city, bound for home. They said they got tired of school routine and hopped a train to Akita after Saturday classes. When they started to walk home, they didn't realize Tokyo was 355 miles away.

the establishment of an experimental police, fire and emergency communications center within Genesee County.

Rep. Dale Kildee, D-Flint, sponsor of the amendment, said the communications center would allow citizens anywhere within the county to call one telephone number for police, fire or other emergencies.

He said the state police operating the communications center would then dispatch the nearest state, county or local unit to the call.

Kildee said his amendment would provide faster and more efficient emergency service to Genesee County. He said he would like to see the plan adopted for other counties in the state.

"The state police is the natural organization to coordinate these facilities," he added.

The appropriations bill now goes to the Senate for consideration.

State News Staff Writer

"Nick do you treat all women as if they're just weak little creatures to be bent to your will?" asks Bev, the heroine of the first women's liberation comic book, "My Love."

Women's liberation comic books, 19th century etiquette books sex manuals and early 20th century girls adventure books are just a few of the items included in an extensive collection of women's materials in the MSU Library.

The Library has been actively collecting women's material since 1970 when the women's movement began emerging said Caroline Blunt, principal clerk of special collections.

The materials are divided into sections on background material of the women's movement, American radicalism which included current pamphlets and women's underground newspapers, women's contemporary poetry and popular culture materials.

The comic, "My Love", which first appeared in 1972, is included in the popular culture collection with some examples of "sexploitation" comics such as "Young Romance," "Young Lust," "Zap" and early "Congession" magazines.

"Some of these comics are hideously sexist and depict a racist attitude toward women," Blunt said.

Underground comics are collected to depict discrimination and exploitation of women, she said.

One issue of "Zap" was involved in an obscenity case several years ago. The library usually collects most comics from dealers or catalogs, but this hard-to-get issue was fished out of a wastebasket by one librarian.

While these current comics focus heavily on "sexploitation" and sexual freedom, the theme of 19th century etiquette and sex manuals was quite different.

"Women were to be ladies with virtually no sexual feelings," Blunt said. "They could be mothers and wives but nice women were never sex objects."

The image of women as good wives and mothers and as competent household managers was also carried over into the late 19th century cookbooks which dictated women's roles.

The subject of a woman's competency was also the theme of numerous novels written by 300 women writers during the Southern Renaissance from 1920-1965.

This group of writers attempts to define the southern woman mystique based on the concept of chivalry and the helpless female, Blunt said.

"But in fact, southern women were required to be extremely competent in household management."

Another popular culture collection includes numerous editions of early 20th century girl adventure books.

"Girls at this time were much more adventurous," Blunt said, listing book titles such as "The Outdoor Girls in the Air," and "The Girl Aviators and the Phantom Airship," to support her statement.

The collection of and punch cards will continue through summer. The authority now picks up of the paper and half a ton of card week, Moore said.

The authority recycled more than tons of paper this year, and by the spring term they were recycling almost of the copies of the State News print each week, Moore said.

Until this spring the five-term authority was funded by ASMSU employed only three people at beginning of the year. The program is self-sustaining, and employs 12 part-work/study students.

Moore said that authority hopes to $600 of the $1,800 they owe for a foot van and pallet jack they purchased from the MSU Food Stores at beginning of this term. They hope to the entire bill paid off by the end of winter term, he added.

He said the authority intends to recycle wooden pallets used in University commerce beginning next term, and other possible areas for program expansion during the summer.

Library collection honors women background material includes numerous books on the women's movement such as a first edition of "Vindicta of the Rights of Women" one of the basics of women's movement, said.

"A number of books are amazing outspoken for their and clearly anticipate women's movement," said.

A collection of American radicalism includes current pamphlets on women's underground newspapers and a full stories in these newspapers. A separate collection devoted to modern women's poetry.

These five collections of women's materials located in the basement of the Library in the Special Collections section.

Group questions police drug raids

MIDLAND (UPI) — The American Civil Liberties Union Tuesday asked city and state police for a public explanation of massive drug raids here last month.

Paul Brink, Midland County ACLU chairman, and George P. Crist Jr., editorial writer for the Bay City Times and Central Michigan ACLU chairman, asked that drug enforcement policies be "reviewed and changed."

They referred to drug raids April 25 in which 35 persons were arrested. The ACLU complained that the constitutional rights of many of those arrested were violated.

"The only reason we can see for the mass nighttime arrests are publicity and record-making, neither of which is a sound reason for violating rights," Brink and Crist said in a letter.

PIRGIM study charges ambulance care faulty

By LINDA SANDEL
State News Staff Writer

The private ambulance industry in Michigan uses unsafe practices with inadequate equipment and engages in cut-throat competition that endangers lives, the Public Interest Research Group in Michigan (PIRGIM), charged Tuesday.

An 85-page report, PIRGIM charged private ambulance companies in Michigan with negligence in nearly every aspect of emergency medical service.

Many ambulance officials and government agencies had yet seen the report Tuesday and could not comment, one spokesman for the Michigan Assn. of Ambulance Services, said that the report is based on exaggerated fact, incidents blown completely out of proportion and that generalizations.

The report hits the ambulance industry in 10 areas ranging from licensing violations and inadequate training procedures to substandard emergency medical treatment facilities.

Examples of negligence were compiled for the report through interviews conducted by eight volunteer student investigators with 38 government officials and industry personnel.

The interviews took place over a period of seven months and were conducted in southern Michigan, especially in the metropolitan areas of Detroit, Ann Arbor and Lansing.

In one instance, PIRGIM cites an interview with an ambulance company ex-employee who alleged that a family member service employed a supposedly retarded son as an ambulance attendant.

Another experienced driver reportedly told PIRGIM that one time he was forced to stop an emergency vehicle that was driving, to explain the basic working of an oxygen machine to an untrained attendant.

In yet another case, an attendant told PIRGIM that he encountered extreme incompetence on the part of new employees who had supposedly gone through rigorous first-aid training.

This attendant said that one new employee panicked when an elderly patient went into a cardiac arrest.

"He just stood back looking, didn't know where to find the airways," the attendant said. "He (the new employee) closed chest compression on the stomach, tried to use airway upside down and forgot how to give oxygen."

Knight McKesson, public relations spokesman for the ambulance association said he is sure that some of the allegations listed in the report do exist but stated that the percentage is extremely small.

"I would dare PIRGIM to present documented, credible examples of the kind of violations they say exist," he said.

"I signed and I am reluctant to give it any kind of endorsement," he added.

The report also claimed that:

- Violations of attendant licensing requirements are rampant. Many employees have received licenses on the basis of fraudulent Red Cross cards, the report said.

- Red Cross advanced training is not adequate for training of ambulance attendants.

- Red Cross is not able to adequately regulate fraudulent use of its credentials.

- Ambulance regulations under current law permit the use of vehicles which are not adequate for emergency health care and which are not safe at high speed.

- Safety checks of emergency vehicles are not adequate.

- Many older vehicles used in health care are not licensed.

- Many companies do not maintain the minimal emergency health care equipment required by law.

- Companies often engage in cutthroat competition such as monitoring radios and jumping the calls of other companies or stacking calls (accepting calls they cannot fill) until a vehicle is available.

- The state Emergency Medical Services Section is not structured or staffed to deal with or monitor these abuses.

"We had a number of independent leads indicating that this (the ambulance industry) was a hot area, particularly from the Lansing and Detroit areas," said Michael Peisner, coauthor of the report entitled, "They're Supposed to Save Your Life."

Peisner claimed that Michigan could lose 10 per cent of its federal highway funds unless it upgrades standards required by a 1966 federal Highway Safety Act.

This act is an enabling legislation which requires the state to set up specific safety regulations for emergency health vehicles.

Bills on inmate rights studied

By ELLEN E. GRZECH
State News Staff Writer

A prisoners' bill of rights, guaranteeing inmates voting, visiting and organizing privileges, is being considered by committees in the Michigan House of Representatives.

The series of bills would also give prisoners rights from growing their hair as long as they like to visiting privately with their wives one weekend a month.

"Prisoners need this relief, they need better treatment," Rep. Jackie Vaughn III, D-Detroit, said Tuesday. "I've visited these places [prisons], I've been to Jackson. They have problems, and we need a new system to handle them."

Vaughn, who introduced the package of bills, said there was opposition on the part of corrections officials to some of the proposals.

"Prison officials would rather see these changes go through existing channels," Vaughn said. "They want to exhaust all remedies within the present system. But it hasn't worked. It's the same old tired system."

The corrections department supports some of the measures in the prisoners' bill of rights, though they say others are impractical.

The department, agreeing with one of the measures, recommends prisoners be given the right to vote but calls for the voting to be on absentee ballots to avoid a concentrated inmate vote that would upset the community equilibrium.

Ed Turner, administrative assistant to the state corrections director, said the department also supports the concept of an ombudsman for inmates, as proposed in one of the bills. It would rather see an ombudsman who would handle grievances and problems for all state agencies, but supports such an office for prisoners, Turner said.

One bill would allow prisoners to join unions and bargain collectively with prison officials on living conditions, education, wages, food and treatment. The measure would let inmates strike after voting on an unsettled grievance.

"We don't support this," Turner said. "The management of prison primarily is the responsibility of officials."

The corrections department does not support the proposal for an inmate council with power over rules of the institution and prison living conditions and privileges because it says the proposal is not needed.

"There is a representative system at institutions already," Turner said.

"We have a grievance procedure and resident representatives. And we think they work."

Turner said the department thinks conjugal visits, as suggested in one of the bills, are impractical due to prohibitive cost. There are about 2,120 married inmates, he said, and it would cost about $5,300,000 to build and staff units for private visits.

It is also impractical to let prisoners grow their hair as long as they want, Turner said.

"Our primary concern is the large institution and the identification problem," he said. "Thousands of people go in and out, and there are few guards. It's a security problem."

The corrections department has so far only appeared before committee on the ombudsman bill.

Vaughn said he has high hopes that the committees will act favorably on the bills and submit them to the legislature for consideration.

Police arrest 3 more for campus bike theft

Campus police have arrested three men, one of them a juvenile, for stealing a bicycle from Landon Hall.

The arrests brought to the total number of persons arrested for stealing from campus in the past week. All of those arrested were nonstudents.

The juvenile was turned over to his parents and the two men were released on their own recognizance, following their arrest Saturday.

A 17-year-old Lansing man was arrested Friday afternoon by campus police for possession of a bicycle stolen at MSU. He was arrested on South Holmes Street in Lansing while police were investigating another bike theft. The incident was referred to the Ingham County Sheriff's Dept. for investigation.

Last Wednesday three persons were arrested by Lansing police for possession of a stolen bicycle and campus police said those arrests may have solved a number of bike thefts on campus.

Ten bicycles were stolen from campus over the Memorial Day weekend at a total loss of $710.

Based on MSU Dept. of Public Safety records, 736 bikes were stolen from the beginning of fall term 1971 to the end of spring term 1972 with a combined loss of about $51,000.

Sgt. Harold Henderson of the department said he expects this year's figures to be even higher. He said the department considers bike thefts a serious problem and has intensified bike and rack checks in an effort to cut the rising theft rate.

Shell made a big blunder by hiring a nonunion builder

Shell Oil Co. blundered into a bigger mess than anyone could have possibly anticipated when it hired a nonunion firm to build its new gas processing plant in Kalkaska.

The best thing Shell could do now is to rehire a union builder and make effective use of the building trade union members ready and willing to work in Kalkaska.

The boycott was organized by the building trade union as a protest against the hiring of Delta Engineering Corp. of Houston, Texas, a company who uses nonunion labor as its working force.

"We didn't expect the consequences," Jack A. Naye, manager of community relations for Shell Oil Co. in Michigan, said.

There is more involved at Kalkaska than just Shell's hiring of Delta. What is at stake is the entire concept of organized labor.

According to Stan Arnold, director of the Michigan Trades Council, Delta is hiring nonunion contractors who are paying nearly the same wages as union, but are not paying for any fringe benefits.

The entire concept of unionization was to get a decent wage and fringe benefits that would enable a worker to maintain a decent standard of living.

If Shell uses Delta, it will be a signal for other major firms to employ nonunion labor at lower or comparable wages with no fringe benefits. It could set a bad precedent for organized labor.

The work unions have done in the last 30 years to improve the lot of the common worker is immeasurable. Increased wages, reduced hours and hospitalization are just a few benefits that unions have gained for the worker.

Shell Oil made a serious mistake in underestimating the effect that hiring nonunion labor would have on the union man.

Misused monies

Even with spiraling inflation, the federal government has found new ways to blow money under the guise of presidential "security."

Over $100,000 was spent for security devices on President Nixon's San Clemente estate by the federal government during the last four years. These exceedingly important "improvements" include a billowy beach cabana, a redwood fence, a storage shed, and an electric heating system for the President's fortress.

What is most distressing about the concocted construction is that the White House said last weekend that the government had spent only $39,525 for improvements on the estate, and not the $100,000 which San Clemente city building permit records disclosed.

Somehow, the added improvements just happened to enhance the value of the oceanside property owned by Nixon and one of his wealthy friends, New York industrialist Robert Abplanalp. It seems the federal government now is even helping to subsidize the fortunes of private citizens, and not just powerful presidents.

POINT OF VIEW

Some 'bad apple' reporters hurt State News coverage

By DANA D. BRADEN
Rochester senior

In a recent essay Jonathan Kaufman stated some very perceptive comments but also showed us his naivete on the subject of State News reporting. First, do not get me wrong, I have a great respect for Jonathan Kaufman and other State News reporters. I feel that probably a majority of the State News reporters are well qualified and fair people, but there are a few rotten apples on the State News staff that tend to reduce the paper's semblances of a professional newspaper.

Of course, we all should realize that the State News is composed of mostly amateur reporters who are still learning their trade and I do not fault them for being less than professional. After all, as a fellow student I fully realize that because we enter this great University we are not magically transformed into professionals.

But because these reporters are amateurs that does not give them a right to lie or to prejudicially report the news. Even under Kaufman's criteria he set down in his essay some reporters are doing a great injustice to the State News and the student body.

I challenge Kaufman and any other staff member of the State News to analyze the articles which have appeared in the State News during the term in which Doug Carl or my name appears and to see if the criteria Kaufman sets down as good reporting are met.

Kaufman said that it is wrong to simply report a campus group's "straight propaganda as straight news," and I agree with him completely. But the facts of life are that in three different articles which appeared on page one of the State News reporters both reported what legal aide officer Charles Massoglia and election chairwoman Maria Simpson had to say on different cases without attempting to find out the other side.

But of course the reporters in question had a right to write all of Massoglia's and Simpson's arguments and comments, because everyone knows that the Democratic groups do not release propaganda, but only straight news, while only the Republican groups issue propaganda.

Kaufman further states "A reporter must tell what he sides say, and if they all tell half-truths he must report the too." I believe that Kaufman is absolutely right; both sides of every issue should be told, but this is where these few amateur State News reporters failed the most. If you will notice, in all articles written concerning Carl's case and myself since the beginning of this term, when it came to presenting our side to the issues it was written "Could not be reached."

The reporters were very truthful because Carl and myself were unavailable for comment especially since the reporters never tried to contact either of us. I simply gave up, trying to complain about the bad reporting because complaining to some senior staff members of the State News is like bashing one's head against a brick wall.

One final note many of our readers do not realize the special treatment I have received from the State News in the past. For example, when I write a letter to the editor criticizing a member of the State News or some other member of the student government, that person is told ahead of time so that he may respond to my criticism on the same page. Also, after the article appearing in the 18 issue of the State News in which Maria Simpson was allowed to give her response to the disciplinary complaint filed against her and the election commission, Maria was also given a news article in the Tuesday issue in which her defense was given exclusive coverage.

Do not get me wrong - I am not opposed to being scrutinized. As a matter of fact, my only complaint with the State News and members of student government is that they only scrutinize one side - the conservatives.

The State News should stop copping out and take an active role as a watchdog over all factions, groups and individuals on campus and not a select few.

Finally, it's about time that the State News and Jonathan Kaufman take a look at their bad apples who are trying to crucify certain groups on campus. After all, only by internal improvements can the State News become a better newspaper.

Skill saved Skylab

The U. S. space command, by enabling the Skylab mission to continue without great failure, has once again proven that the manned space program of this country is by far the best of Earth.

The world's largest space vehicle was hampered in its launch by the loss of a micrometeorite shield that is designed to eliminate heat. The orbiting space lab also lost 50 percent of its power when its solar panels jammed.

Indeed Skylab could have very well met the same defeat that its Russian counterpart, Salyut, ran up against one month ago - total failure.

But U. S. space technicians have managed to recuperate the space vehicle and three astronauts are now carrying out experiments which should add to the minuscule knowledge that man has of space.

While the Skylab program will cost taxpayers billions of dollars, the benefits that can be derived from learning to survive in the intense heat of space may open new vistas in man's living environment.

The government and the space program deserve support for exploring the new world of space through Skylab and for salvaging what could have been a multi-billion dollar catastrophe.

The Doctor's Bag

By ARNOLD WERNER, MD

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at the University Health Center. Names need not be included unless a personal reply is requested.

For four years I have tried to think of a solution to this problem. One of my girlfriends has a most annoying habit of smacking her lips at meals. She can muster the most unbelievable sounds. Could she have some palate or inner mouth disorder that would make her do this? First of all, she seems totally unaware of this problem! Help us help her.

If she is speaking fairly clearly and does not have false teeth, the odds of a physical disorder causing the situation you describe is minimal. In some cultures, lip smacking and other oral noises signify enjoyment of the food being eaten and is taken as a compliment to the host. If the behavior of your friend is actually attracting that much attention, you would be doing her a favor by pointing it out to her. If she doubts your word, you can join the national trend and surreptitiously tape a record of dinner.

I heard that if a man were to wear boxer shorts instead of tight fitting underwear, he would remain sexually potent longer. The idea was that one's testes would be freer, get more exercise, and hence have better circulation.

The theory behind wearing loose fitting underwear that you allude to, is not related to freedom or exercise. Testes are designed to be indolent. They hang loose in the scrotal sac so that they are maintained at a slightly lower temperature than the rest of the body, this being more conducive to the production of live sperm. However, it would only be in the most unusual of circumstances that tight fitting underwear would hold the testes close enough to the body to heat them up sufficiently to inactivate them. In any case, producing active sperm is not the same thing as impotence, which is a failure to be able to perform sexually. Excessive worry can produce impotence, however.

I have been told that bathing in water that has been treated with bath salts or oils can be harmful to the vagina. Is this true?

In a normal sitting position in a bathtub, the vagina is fairly exposed and soapy water can enter it. Occasionally, one hears of women who have developed irritations in the area around the opening of the vagina and have traced this to using a particular soap or bath preparation.

Obviously, this does not affect the vast majority of women. A more dangerous situation was uncovered several years ago involving the use of bubble baths by little girls. Here the soapy water had a sufficiently irritating and penetrating quality so as to enter the urethra (the tube leading to the bladder) and resulted in some urinary tract infections. For this reason pediatricians often advise against the use of bubble baths for little girls. I do not know enough about the bubble bath behavior of grown women to comment on that.

We have a seven - month - old boy. So far we have not noticed any erection in him though we have been told by friends that have boys of his age that erections do happen. Could this be anything serious or be a result of faulty circumcision?

Most seven - month - old boys I have looked at have rather small penises. Their erections are also rather small. If you are looking for startling and dramatic changes in the size of his phallus, you are bound to be disappointed. Erections in little boys are often apparent when they are being bathed or their diapers are being changed. The odds are that there is nothing to worry about and rather than launch a vigil waiting for so special occurrence, you might discuss with the physician you are taking your little boy to on your next visit.

With this column I, like most of the current graduating class, mark the end of my fourth academic year at Michigan State University. In saying good - by to all who are leaving, I want to give you my thanks for sharing with me, and the readers of the column, your questions and concerns. In major way I have received education from writing the column and hope that I have contributed some way to your education. Good health, good luck and do good things.

LETTER POLICY
The State News welcomes all letters. Letters to the editor should be typed double - spaced with 65 space counts on each line. Letters must be signed and include hometown, student, faculty or staff standing, local phone number and local address. No unsigned letters will be accepted, but the State News will withhold author's name in extreme cases. Letters may be edited for clarity and conciseness so more letters can be accommodated. Letters will not be edited for content.

Vice detail

To the Editor:

Considering the number of items appearing in Police Briefs that are indecent exposures and rapes perpetrated by the heterosexual man of our campus community on the women of our community, considering the complete absence of reported incidents of homosexual molestation, one can only assume that policeman hours spent on the vice detail in the Union might be better utilized.

Sharpener

To the Editor:

I would like to concur with the letter of Jim Oslund on the lack of pencil sharpeners in classrooms. However, I had no idea that any namby - pamby person or persons had decided that the faculty's push button convenience was more important than the students' use of manual sharpeners, which run 1/20 the cost of an electric sharpener.

I hope a meeting is soon convened of the responsible persons who are able to correct the unseemly situation.

Double standards?

To the Editor:

The firing of Jeff Strouss, Holden Hall resident assistant, raises a basic question: how realistic is the University about student use of marijuana?

Is the University supporting a double standard by condemning the use, in public, of marijuana by a staff member while maintaining such a lenient policy towards private use by students?

Was the decision to fire Jeff Strouss based upon the strength of his relationships with the people of his floor or on an "image" he might give to outsiders? Obviously the people on a floor know whether or not the RA smokes.

If the University feels that residence hall staff consumption of marijuana is such a problem, and a hindrance to job performance, then perhaps they should root it out at all levels, not just when it becomes a supposed threat to the University image.

We feel that more consideration should be given to Strouss' abilities as an RA rather than whether he did in public what so many people do in private.

New comedy talent

To the Editor:

I wish to congratulate Vicki Renninger on her excellent, and potentially funny, portrayal of an ignorant know - nothing in the point of view, "Indians - Parasites on Society."

Renninger has a brilliant sense of the absurd and I believe she could develop into an important comedy talent. However, she has one major problem in her act: her subject matter.

Obviously, the condition of American Indians is not a subject that is very conducive to comedy.

Give teacher credit

To the Editor:

I feel that credit should be given where credit is due and it is in that context that I am writing with regard to the article you had on May 23 pertaining to the co - ed class at the Ingham County Jail.

Nowhere in the article was there any mention made of Janet Metzelaar who has taught that class since its inception. It is because of her inspiration, guidance, dedication and enthusiasm that the class is as popular as it is.

She is the primary person responsible for the success of newsletter and it is her ability to maintain an easy rapport with inmates as well as the atmosphere of her classes facilitates the free and meaningful flow of information between her and her students.

She is a credit to her profession and plays a significant role in the rehabilitation program at the jail.

Protest movement not dead, but wearing different clothes

The student movement, or more generally The Movement, is in a different clothing today than it was five years ago. But by no stretch of the imagination is The Movement dead, as many establishment types would have us believe and as many students themselves believe.

The student movement accomplished its basic objective during the years of street demonstrations: it shook the confidence of the middle class man in following a government that consistently abuses power and oppresses the weak. The Watergate incident could not have been brought into the public and the widespread belief among Americans that their own president may have had prior knowledge of it could not have happened if the confidence in the government had not first been shaken by decade of turbulence.

The atmosphere now is ripe for acceptance of many of the ideas that were first introduced in the demonstrations very few and far between, that the political ideology of the left seems to be finally developing and may come closer to being accepted by those in power than ever before.

It is extremely difficult to talk about the student movement. For one reason, it was part of something larger that included blacks, other minorities, women and many other groups that found themselves on the outside of the boardroom looking in.

Another reason is that we are still very close to the experience. Most students who were involved, either role in attempts at change in the future, a kind of new radicalism. One study project underway here is the Coalition for Human Survival's Radical Research, which is examining East Lansing's zoning practices, land use and sale, its governing structure and physically or emotionally, harbor their own illusions about it. Even though millions of people may have been involved, The Movement remains an intensely personal experience.

So with these qualifications, let me suggest three fronts where the student movement seems to be moving forward, fighting for the same ideals that sparked much of the more visible protest of the 60s.

Some local activists are saying that research and study may play a greater the allocation of money. Whereas before a leftist group might have staged a protest demanding more money for poor East Lansing residents (i.e. students), now a group is making a low-key assault that in the end may have more results than just a demonstration.

The same thing in both cases is at stake and the people involved are the same. But a new tactic is being used, one that seems more likely to succeed. On a larger scale, Common Cause, Ralph Nader's organizations and other similar groups are carrying the battle

Students were sprayed with pepper gas last spring during an anti-war demonstration on Grand River Avenue. Perhaps this protest will be the last time that angry students need to take their concerns into the street.

Hitler movie--mediocre documentary

By JOHN LINDSTROM
State News Reviewer

Less than 30 years after his death civilization still seems to find it incredible that Adolf Hitler ever lived. Humanity has developed a sort of Hitler mania, devouring the countless biographies and written accounts of the man and his Reich, in an effort, it seems, to convince themselves that Hitler did live, that he was mad, and that he very nearly destroyed civilization.

The newest effort to convince the world of Hitler's existence is not a book, but a film.

"Hitler: The Last Ten Days" is a Hollywood-style production done up to look like a documentary of Hitler's last days in the bunker.

To facilitate this documentary effect the director, Ennio DeConcini, employs actual documentary footage within the film.

Entertainment

But for all the effort put into it, the film adds up to only a mediocre evening of entertainment.

The film opens on April 20, 1945, Hitler's 56th birthday. Hitler, played by Alec Guinness, is a broken, old, tired and sick man. Still he believes victory can be his. He holds daily meetings within the bunker, plotting strategy, deploying troops to defend Berlin, assuring the Reich will persevere. Enter Hauptman Hoffmann, played by Simon Ward, a young idealistic officer, dedicated to his Führer, and actually pleased with the idea of staying in the bunker to the end.

The viewer is then expected to see Hitler through the eyes of this young man. To see a madman as Hoffmann saw him and then to become as disgusted with Hitler as Hoffmann does in the end.

The film plays on the decay of Hitler's empire. There are constant flashbacks to the great party convention at Nuremberg, films of Rudolph Hess screaming "Germany is Hitler, Hitler is Germany!" The reminders of Hitler's former control and mastery are contrasted with his one remaining pitiful power, a no smoking rule — within the bunker.

DeConcini attempts to show the viewer Hitler's insanity through his personal qualities. DeConcini flaunts the man, stripped of his glory and power, saying: "See? He was always a madman, how could we have allowed him to gain power?"

Hitler's major traits, as shown in the film, are his incredible vanity, his simplistic taste in art and his drive for racial purity.

Hitler's vanity is shown in the constant photographs he is forever having taken of himself, and is forever passing out to his friends.

"The people must know what I looked like. I don't want what happened to me — Jesus to happen to me — painters painting me anyway they feel like," he tells his mistress Eva Braun.

For art we see Hitler listening to his favorite waltzes and operas. He also fools about designing opera halls; muttering that Speer should be around because Speer understands architecture, where Hitler never applied his full genius to it.

To Hitler, racial superiority goes without saying. At one point he mixes art and racial superiority. "We will never attain pure racial superiority until our singers can perform Wagner's operas naked," he tells the fascinated Josef Goebbels and Martin Bormann.

But in the end Hitler realizes all is lost and prepares to do away with himself and Eva. It is then he tells Eva he knew the war was lost in 1943. "Maybe I didn't know you," mutters Eva philosophically, as she drops some cyanide. "Of course you didn't," screams Adolf, shooting himself. And with the gunshot everyone in the bunker lights up their first legal smoke. Hoffmann, however, has already left the bunker, carrying Hitler's last will and testament, which he defiantly tears up.

The film is obviously a propaganda exercise warning us that another Hitler could rise again. But it comes off more like an absurd melodrama.

Guinness' Hitler, instead of looking like a madman, looks more like a pathetic clown. He loses all his fearful intensity and looks more like someone to be pitied, rather than hated.

Simon Ward shows all the charm and emotion of a wet clam. Doris Kantsmann as Eva, does well as Hitler's simpaton mistress, but all the rest of the performance are hack emotionless portrayals of real people.

DeConcini's direction is stylishly done. He exhibits all the flair of a good director of musicals, but is totally inept at bringing out the drama and history of his subject.

As a matter of fact, the only truly good part of the film is the makeup. Whoever was in charge of makeup did a brilliant job of recreating Hitler, Goebbels, Bormann, Eva, and the entire German high command.

'Emigrants' intriguing work

The crowds that have filled the State Theatre for the past week have affirmed that there is something different about "The Emigrants."

It is more than just a Swedish version of one of those sentimental, historical epics of which the movie-going public was once so fond.

The film stands out in its unusual quality and visual beauty, and it intrigues the viewer by posing more questions than it answers.

Like Vilhelm Moberg's lengthy novel, on which the film is based, "The Emigrants" spares neither time nor detail. Keeping one's interest for two and a half hours, the film records the 1844 emigration of a group of Swedish peasants from their native Smaland to America.

Exploiting the talents of his actors and the beauty of the raw countryside, director Jan Troell presents a fresh vision of people who came to America in search of "a new land, a new hope, a new dream."

The talented duo, Max

Von Sydow and Liv Ullmann, star as a farmer and his wife, Karl and Kristina Oskar. The Oskars are weary of annually poor harvests as they struggle to feed their growing family. They leave Sweden for America in the hopes of cultivating the rich soil they had heard about.

The hired workers, Eddie Axberg as Karl's brother, Robert, and Svenolof Bern as Nils, his friend, escape Sweden for a different reason.

They resent the abuse and discrimination they bear as members of the lower class. They are drawn to America, where they have read that there are no "commoners and gentry," but "all are equal."

Allen Edwall as Danjel and Ulla Smidje as his wife, play a couple suffering from religious oppression. Danjel, a self-proclaimed minister, leaves under threats of imprisonment for his unauthorized preaching.

The viewer gets to know this "family" of Swedes on their long voyage across the Pacific, by building a sympathy for the characters and a curiosity to know more about them. This curiosity is never satisfied in the film, as Troell teases the viewer with scenes that are never explained and with conflicts that are never resolved.

For instance, what will result from Robert's ear injury, which was caused by a vicious blow from his former employer? Though the injury grows worse and is often referred to, the viewer never knows the answer. Likewise, the audience witnesses the young man's increasing interest for the woman Ulrika's daughter, that never developed.

Even the major questions, such as whether Karl and Kristina will have luck in the new land, or whether Danjel will establish his new religion, are ignored in the film.

"The Emigrants," then, avoids answering most of the conflicts it raises. In the end, this is of little consequence to the film, exists as a work of beauty itself, while serving to whet our appetite for the promised sequel, entitled appropriately, "The New Land."

'Cod war' brings cries that ships imperil peace

REYKJAVIK (AP) - Iceland on Tuesday called the presence of British warships in disputed Icelandic cod fishing waters a threat to peace.

The complaint was the latest development in the nine-month-old "cod war" between Iceland and Great Britain over Iceland's claim of a 50-mile limit for its territorial waters. International treaties traditionally call for a 12-mile limit.

The "cod war" entered the shooting stage Saturday when an Icelandic gunboat fired several shells into the bow of the 884-ton British trawler Everton.

Iceland unilaterally declared the 50-mile zone closed to non-Icelandic fishermen last year, citing fears that British and other trawlers were cleaning out the fishing grounds on which Iceland's industry depends.

But Britain refused to recognize the Icelandic claim.

Iceland's Foreign Minister Einar Agustsson, speaking after a special meeting of Iceland's leftist coalition Cabinet, served notice that Iceland's government opposes suggestions that North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) Secretary-General Joseph Luns reconcile the Icelandic and British governments.

"We don't want NATO mediation," the foreign minister told newsmen. "We have not referred the fishing dispute to NATO, but have asked it only to arrange for the withdrawal of Britain's warships."

Agustsson added that Iceland will not try to rally backing for a Security Council resolution condemning the entry of three British frigates into the zone 10 days ago.

In London, British trawler owners met with government officials and navy officers to tighten security for the fishing fleet operating off Iceland. Skippers were warned not to leave two trawler packs, each protected by a frigate and two unarmed support vessels.

Skippers were told they might be suspended if they stray from the packs. The British trawler Everton was shelled when it sailed off alone.

Agustsson also said talks will begin with the United States next month to revise the defense agreement between the two countries.

Under that 22-year-old pact, Americans man an air-sea surveillance base at Keflavik from which the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) monitors Soviet maritime movements in the North Atlantic.

Nation: Exerciser tires out Skylab space crew

Skylab astronauts asked officials Tuesday that a bicycle exerciser aboard the orbiting space station be curtailed because working in 80-degree heat exhausted them. In a secret conversation, Mission Control was assured the astronauts were in good shape but asked that the exerciser be limited. The exerciser is a part of the Skylab medical studies of the effects of living in the tightness of space for long periods.

the federal gasoline tax. Sources said the government increase would range from one to 10 cents a gallon and that one reason for such an increase would be to raise prices in order to drive down gasoline demand and consumption.

The present federal tax is 4 cents. It is estimated that a penny rise in the federal tax would bring an additional $1 billion tax bite.

Shultz indicated that the government is considering other means of slowing the economy. The composite index of leading national economic indicators declined by .6 per cent in April, the first decline in 30 months, seen as evidence that the country's economic boom may be slowing already.

In other developments in the gasoline shortage crisis, cities and states around the country are finding their once prized contracts for bulk fuel supplies going begging as a result of the shortage. Some commercial suppliers are raising prices and reducing deliveries to their customers.

Storms kill 48

President Nixon declared Alabama and Arkansas

The expressions of Burt Smith after one year as MSU athletic director

Coaching change heads Smith's year

By GARY SCHARER
State News Sports Writer

EDITOR'S COMMENT:

State News sports writer Gary Scharer recently talked with MSU Athletic Director Burt Smith about his first year on the job. The following is the first of two articles on Smith's observations.

Burt Smith's door is always open. That policy has perhaps become the most reputable in Smith's first - year administration of MSU's athletic department.

"I don't ever want to sit in a corner of an office hidden from people," Smith said. "I think you have to meet people eye - to - eye when there are problems. The doors are always open to any student, athlete, coach or faculty member. We'll always sit down and listen to any gripe. The most important thing that can exist in any department is communication."

Smith was asst. athletic director under Biggie Munn and took temporary charge of the program when Munn suffered a stroke in the fall of 1971. Just over one year ago Smith was named permanent director of MSU athletics. Smith's administration has been a busy one. More changes have probably developed in the past year and a half than in the last five for MSU athletics.

"It has been a hectic year. I had no idea things were going to be so involved as they were," Smith chuckled.

Several of the major developments include the formation of the Coalition of Black Athletes (CBA), women athletics gaining varsity status, the resignation of Duffy Daugherty and the subsequent search for a successor.

"Some of the things the coalition talked with the administration about were problems that existed not only with black athletes but with the total athletic population," Smith recalled. "And I think from this has come an understanding of some of the problems the athletes thought should be rectified."

"From that general meeting there have been some decided improvements that have been made for our total athletic program."

Since the black coalition confrontation the athletic department has printed two pamphlets, and asst. director Clarence Underwood has written a handbook that concerns the conduct of an athlete and mutual expectations between athletes, coaches and administration.

"There's no question in the athlete's mind where he stands, what he can do and where he can go when he needs assistance," Smith said.

Just as delicate as the coalition demands was the women's push for varsity status and budgets.

In the past there was a set amount of money given to the women from the physical education department to be used as the women saw fit.

"Mr. Breslin (University vice president Jack Breslin) and I talked about this and we felt we should develop a program very much similar to the program that we have for men," Smith said.

The men's gymnastics, golf, tennis, lacrosse, soccer and fencing programs are coached by individuals who are part of the physical education department. Their salaries are paid from both the physical education and athletic departments.

"We felt this has been a real successful program," Smith said. "In essence, we're getting coaching from qualified people who also are teaching."

A similar philosophy was adopted for organizing the women's program. Budgets for travel, meals, equipment and general services were established on the same basis for men's sports. A woman athletic director was then hired to handle the program.

"It's her job to correlate all these budgets, keep these people operating and run a program similar to what we're doing here," Smith said. "So, really, when you look at the two programs with our so called non - revenue sports and women's athletics, you see a great correlation between the two, and I think this is the direction women athletics is going."

One of Smith's bigger challenges in his first year was the hunt for a football coach.

In the process Smith talked to many people. The press Smith contends, twisted things out of proportion and brought "unfortunate publicity" to MSU.

Smith talked to some coaches, such as Chuck Fairbanks not as candidates for the MSU position, but to gather input for his selection.

"I recognized that Denny Stolz had the ability. In fact Denny Stolz was the first person I talked to about the MSU job," Smith said. "But I wanted to talk to a lot of people to find out what their ideas were."

"Perhaps I had been here so long and watched our program and that of the Big Ten that it was time to get ideas of other people. I think it's good administration getting ideas from other leagues, other sources to find out the type of programs that you want to come up with."

"There were many amusing things coming out of the newspapers," Smith said.

Wood knuckles AL

NEW YORK (UPI) — Wilbur Wood of the Chicago White Sox, baseball's new "iron man" pitcher, is a plump, somewhat balding fellow you'd expect to find sitting behind a desk in an insurance office.

Wood's stock in trade is a dancing knuckleball which looks so easy to hit as it floats up to the plate that fat and fortyish fans feel like grabbing a bat and hitting it out of the park themselves.

Instead, Wood's knuckler is: (1) driving rival American League hitters nuts; (2) enabling the 31-year old native of Cambridge, Mass., to set a fantastic winning pace this season; and (3) making the White Sox strong contenders to win the AL's Western Division title and the pennant.

"The principle of the knuckleball is that it is easy to throw and hard to hit," explains Wood, who allowed six hits in 14 innings Monday night to win both games as the White Sox topped the Cleveland Indians 6 - 3 in a suspended game and 4 - 0 in a regularly scheduled game. "The easier you throw the knuckler the harder it is to hit."

Because of that combination of circumstances, Wood has compiled a 13 - 3 record in the White Sox' first 40 games this season. He has scored half of the White Sox' 26 victories, worked 131 2/3 innings and pitched four shutouts and nine complete games. That performance spread over a full season would make Wilbur a 52-game winner, give him 524 innings pitched, 16 shutouts and 36 complete games.

Wood developed his knuckler as a high school pitcher in Cambridge but didn't become exclusively a knuckleball pitcher until 1967 when he joined the White Sox and met Hoyt Wilhelm. By that time he had won a total of one game in three trials with the Boston Red Sox and two with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

"I figured I wasn't making much of an impression on anybody and I was thinking of quitting," says Wood. "So I had to listen when a knuckleball expert like Wilhelm told me the pitch could make me a success. It took some soul-searching but I decided to bet my career on the knuckler."

"Wilhelm gave me one warning," Wilbur adds. "He said to throw nothing but knucklers because the hitters would be waiting for any other pitch."

Wood became an immediate success as a relief pitcher and became a starter in May, 1971. Wood went on to post a 22 - 13 record in 334 innings in 1971 and a 24 - 17 mark in 377 innings in 1972. Woods' 377 innings in 1972 were the most pitched by an AL pitcher since 1912.

Top Indy turnout saw rain Monday

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI) — Monday's rainout of the 500 mile auto race occurred before the biggest crowd in Speedway history, track President Tony Hulman said Tuesday.

"There were over 300,000 tickets sold," he said. "All the seats were sold several days before the race and that's the first time that ever happened."

It was estimated that less than 200,000 — perhaps as few as 150,000 — returned for the futile attempt to run the race Tuesday.

Hulman said that only "20 of 103 concession stands were open" Tuesday, leaving thousands of spectators searching for food and drink.

"It's just unbelievable the number of people that come to the race," Hulman said.

Hulman disclosed he was unable to get a seat himself Monday and added "I never thought I'd see the day that I couldn't get a seat."

His tickets, he said, were given to a party of 10 friends from France who were staying at his Terre Haute, Ind. home. "It's hard to keep them together," he said. "And, only one speaks English and it's hard to find him."

Hulman also said he had talked to John Mecom, owner of the New Orleans Saints of the National Football League, reported to be a possible purchaser of the Speedway. Mecom assured Hulman there was "no truth to the rumor."

Red flag again!

The rich Indianapolis 500 race was postponed because of rain again Tuesday as starter Pat Vidan (center right) waves the red flag to signal the stop of the second attempt to start the affair. It was the first time in 57 years that the red flag has been used on two starts in two days. Raceway officials indicated that they will try to start the classic at 10 a.m. today. AP Wirephoto

The MSU Sailing Club, paced by skippers Derrick Fries and Pete Rodin, captured the Midwest Collegiate Sailing Championship last weekend on Lake Lansing.

The Spartan sailors compiled a total of 39 points in the championship race.

Fries, who has earned the title of the top sailor in North America, won overall individual honors with a 1 - 1 - 1 - 1 - 2 - 2 - 3 record in the seven races for 11 points. John Walton, who is the Sears Cup champion and Mary Ellen Schutz were Fries' crew.

Ohio State placed second in the race with 46 points and Iowa took third with 49 points.

Both MSU and Ohio State qualified for the North American Collegiate championships to be held at Eagle Mountain Lake, near Austin, Tex., starting June 12.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. (UPI) — The million-dollar 500-mile Speedway Auto race was rained out Tuesday for an unprecedented second time in as many days.

One attempt was made to get the classic under way, but it was ended by rain.

Speedway officials called off the 57th annual gasoline derby, the world's richest, at 2:46 p.m., EDT, when it became obvious weather conditions would not clear for the running of the 200-lap grind. They waited four hours and 46 minutes all told before giving up.

A third attempt to get the race in will be made at 10 a.m. EDT, today, but more showers are predicted for the Indianapolis area.

MONTREAL — Left Winger Steve Vickers of the New York Rangers ended a 19-year drought for his team Tuesday by winning the Calder Trophy as the National Hockey League's Outstanding Rookie in 1972-73.

Vickers, a 22-year-old native of Toronto, became the first Ranger to win the trophy since Camille Henry in 1954. Vickers polled 103 points from the hockey writers in the 16 NHL cities, 29 more than runner-up Bill Barber of the Philadelphia Flyers.

The Ranger winger missed 16 games last year but still managed to score 53 points on 30 goals and 23 assists.

BOSTON — Boston Bruins hockey star Phil Esposito agreed Tuesday to pay $870 monthly to support his estranged wife and two daughters, plus mortgage payments, insurance and automobile costs.

A stipulation of the temporary agreement in Suffolk County Superior Court was that Esposito, 31, would have unrestricted visitation privileges with his two daughters, Laure, 9, and Carrie, 5.

Skydiving sextet plans to compete in nationals

By MARK WEIR

Six MSU skydiving enthusiasts are planning a trip to the National Parachute Competition scheduled for this fall.

MSU last participated in this competition in 1971 in Florida. They took seventh place in that competition.

The sextet tentatively making the trip includes Dave Backus, Betsy Boack, Lita Holley, Pam Jarvis, Mark Benshoten and Gerry Oakland.

All but Oakland became interested in parachuting while at MSU. Their education in the sport came via the Michigan State Parachute Club.

Oakland, the sixth member of the team, acquired his parachuting skills while serving in the United States Army Special Forces, Green Berets, and has continued his interests at MSU.

The program and planning are completely student organized and financed.

"A complete outfit with highpowered parachute and minimum expenses will cost approximately $500," Oakland said.

These students are avid jumpers and practice whenever weather permits. Oakland added that the team has been working together as much as possible and is beginning to develop much self-confidence.

The competition is split up into three different categories: accuracy, style and combination.

"Each event requires skill, speed and balance," Oakland said. "You can't half-step on any of these or it will be reflected in your score."

The accuracy competition takes place at 3000 feet.

"You jump and open your chute then delay for five seconds," Oakland continued. "Then you try to manipulate your chute in such a way that you land on a four inch disc surrounded by soft pea gravel."

The style competition is a little more dangerous. A series of maneuvers is performed at 6,000 feet. These maneuvers consist basically of 360 degree turns to both the right and the left with a backloop or flip. This is attempted during the free fall. When the series is completed the chute is opened.

The combination is the final event. It is known as relative work and takes place at 7,300 feet by a team. There are many variations of this exercise. Among these is the three-man star.

"Three men jump, free fall and meet hands to form a star," Oakland explained. "It is much more difficult than that, of course."

In the national competition, points from the three events accumulated by the entire team are totaled.

Oakland explained that while in a free fall, a 12 second terminal velocity is reached in which a parachutist's body descends at about 125 miles per hour. During this time you can alter your body and actually fly.

The competition is open to men and women.

The qualifications for the event are imposed by the United States Parachute Association. Oakland said a participant must maintain safety rules involving persons and equipment.

Any MSU student who has an interest in the skydiving club will not be discouraged from competing with or joining the club. Prospective members are a welcome sight.

Price exam postponed 4th time to await ruling

Preliminary examination for Stanley A. Price, who is charged with the March 11 slaying of Martin Brown, was delayed Tuesday for the fourth time by East Lansing District Judge Maurice Schoenberger so that he could rule on a legal question that arose when the exam began April 11.

Schoenberger said he would present his ruling in writing to the defense and prosecution by Friday on whether statements made by Price to police without the presence of an attorney will be admissible as evidence.

The dispute surrounds statements Price allegedly made to detective Lt. James Dunlap of the MSU Dept. of Public Safety. Defense attorney Marshall Disner objected to Dunlap's testimony recounting Price's statements on the first day of the exam.

Ingham County prosecutor Raymond Scodeller told Schoenberger Tuesday that Dunlap is the last witness he intends to call. Disner told Schoenberger he doesn't plan to call any witnesses.

Price is being held in lieu of $25,000 bond on an open charge of murder. A date for continuation of the exam has not been set.

ANSWERS DEMANDS IN ARGENTINA

Ford donates food to needy

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest in an old army jacket and eight Peronist youths went from door to door of the small brick houses and tin shanties in a slum area Tuesday, delivering armloads of food donated by the Ford Motor Co.

The packages were part of the $180,000 worth of food that Ford promised to provide for needy families to avoid having one of its executives kidnaped or killed.

A Trotskyite guerilla group, the People's Revolutionary Army, warned the local subsidiary of Ford a week ago that unless it provided $1 million for 22 ambulances, food and medical supplies the group would attack the company. The day before the extortion demand was received two Ford employees were shot and wounded during a kidnap attempt outside the company's plant in Pacheco.

Villa Comunicaciones, a tough slum district with about 5,000 residents on the other side of the tracks at the Retiro railroad station, was the first to receive the food parcels.

Trucks delivered 2,500 plastic sacks to the white stucco Chapel of Christ the Worker. Each package contained two pounds of powdered milk, a can of cocoa and a large chocolate bar.

The Rev. Carlos Mujica, a leftist leader of the Third World Priests Movement, agreed to handle distribution with the local Peronist youth group, which made the Villa's mothers club angry.

"We don't think that people should be menaced to give us milk," Mrs. Orora Acuna de Flores of the mothers club, said. "If this food had been offered to us we would have refused but it was given to Mujica."

Mujica, talking to a dozen newsmen in the small chapel, said, "We accepted the milk but we're not in agreement with the guerilla methods. We believe the people must help themselves. However, the imperialist Ford Co., which has taken so many millions from the country, obviously recognized its guilt because it gave in promptly to the guerilla demands."

A ragtag band of youngsters trailed after the priest and his teen-aged assistants as they went about their task, crossing open sewers and plodding through the muddy, irregular streets.

Many of the Villa's residents are Bolivian Indian immigrants, and the women appeared shy and uncertain when they answered the rap at the door. None refused the offered parcel.

"I'm happy to get this for my children," a 20-year-old mother with two infants said. "Milk is so expensive."

Several women said they knew the food had been provided by Ford because of threats but they didn't know why Ford had been picked as the target.

The packages did not contain any guerilla propaganda material.

Panama diplomat gives 1st U.S. talk

Panama's ambassador to the United States will speak about U. S. colonialism in Panama in his first public speech in America at 10:20 a.m. and 1:50 p.m. Thursday in 114 Bessey.

Nicholas Gonzalez - Revilla, 27, is the second youngest foreign ambassador in Washington and has held his position as Panamanian ambassador for about six months.

Gonzalez - Revilla will discuss the historical background of U. S. - Panamanian relationships, the Canal Treaty, the Panamanian position on negotiations for a new canal treaty and the alleged use of the Canal Zone for U. S. defense purposes.

The lecture is sponsored by the Great Issues course, the Latin American Studies Center and the Dept. of Economics.

Capital Capsules

A PUBLIC HEARING to discuss two bills aimed at reducing the price of prescription drugs will be held from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. in the House chambers at the Capitol.

Spokesmen for pharmaceutical manufacturers, pharmacists, representatives of consumer groups, retirees and interested citizens are scheduled to appear at the hearing. Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley will also testify.

The first bill, introduced by Rep. Joseph Forbes, D-Oak Park, would allow pharmacists to substitute generic drugs for expensive brand name drugs. The second bill, also sponsored by Forbes, provides for the creation of a Michigan drug equivalency commission and the preparation of a drug formulary listing equivalent brands of generic drugs. It would also require pharmacists to post prices of the 100 most prescribed drugs as well as allow doctors to veto the substitution of a generic drug for a brand name drug.

REP. HOWARD WOLPE, D-Kalamazoo, has introduced a bill in the House which attempts to eliminate sex role stereotyping in classroom instructional materials.

"Several studies have indicated that instructional materials are often guilty of perpetuating sex stereotypes," Wolpe said. "One of the most recent was a comprehensive study done by a committee established by the Kalamazoo Board of Education to study sex discrimination in the public schools. This study, which included elementary textbooks from every curriculum, found all the materials studied unacceptable because they inadequately reflect the role of females in society."

The bill is currently in the House Constitutional Revision and Women's Rights Committee.

THE STATE HOUSE unanimously passed last week a bill that would increase state aid to public libraries and library systems in Michigan.

The bill increases state aid to public libraries from 5 cents per capita to 35 cents per capita. This increase will affect 250 libraries in the state.

Women's groups angered by bills

Both Sen. William Ballenger, R - Delta Township, and Sen. Gilbert Bursley, R - Ann Arbor, voted in favor of the Senate bill which regulates hospitals. Both had voted for the unsuccessful abortion reform bill in the 1972 legislative session, and campaigned for the abortion referendum in the November election.

In fact, a gamut of legislation has been introduced in attempts to circumvent the Supreme Court decision. Bursley is sponsoring a bill which would require that an abortion be performed by a licensed physician. An amendment to this bill states that anyone performing an illegal abortion - including a self-abortion - is guilty of a felony.

"For the first time in Michigan law, a woman would be considered a criminal if she self-aborts a fetus," Nancy Hammond, member of the Women's Political Caucus said. "Even under the old Michigan statute the woman was not defined as a criminal."

Another bill, introduced by Rep. Dominic J. Jacobetti, D - Negaunee, would set a legal precedent for the rights of a fetus.

The bill would require a licensed doctor performing an abortion to file a death certificate with the county clerk and to proceed for the burial of the fetus. Penalty for a doctor who does not comply would be revocation of his license and a $5,000 fine for each offense.

Another bill in the state Senate reverses the impetus of the high court ruling. It would amend the penal code to provide that a person performing an abortion resulting in a live birth is guilty of manslaughter if the child subsequently dies. This bill, too, reinforces the right of a fetus.

The women's groups are in strong opposition to all these measures. Hammond, a member of women's caucus, and Lee Lavalli of the National Organization of Women have testified in Senate and House hearings on all these measures.

The Women's Political Caucus further resolved unanimously, at its May 5 convention at Kellogg Center to oppose the re-election of any legislator who introduced bills against abortion reform.

A court battle, to insure the rights of women, may develop if the measures are signed into law. But Silea said any suit filed would come not from a women's group but from an individual representative who would be willing to fight the battle. No plans have been readied yet, but Silea said there are many court precedents to substantiate a law suit.

Canada quits as Viet peacekeeper

In Washington, State Dept. officials declined immediate comment on Canada's decision.

The officials made it clear, however, that it was not a surprise.

Sharp said Canada wanted to give discussions between U.S. and North Vietnamese negotiators "every chance of success." The negotiations are to resume in June.

Meanwhile, in Saigon, government sources said presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger and Hanoi's Le Duc Tho have agreed to a new peace plan that calls for Saigon and Viet Cong forces to stop shooting but apparently makes no proposal for ending the war in Cambodia.

South Vietnam has given its approval in principle to the new accord, Saigon sources reported, but has asked for some unspecified modifications.

It was not immediately clear what effect the Canadian pullout in the international peace talks would have on the reported Kissinger - Tho agreement.

The plan provides for an immediate halt to all American reconnaissance flights over North Vietnam and an end within 24 hours to hostilities between Saigon government forces and the Viet Cong.

According to government sources in Saigon, the timetable in the new plan goes like this:

Between 5 and 10 days after a cease-fire, Saigon and the Viet Cong will permit monitors from both sides to be deployed with their immunity guaranteed.

In the same time period the United States will resume clearing mine from North Vietnamese waters and resume economic talks with Hanoi.

Zones of control are to be drawn within three months. Within six months a Council of National Reconciliation and Concord is to be established and the procedure set for national elections. Under terms of the original Paris agreement, this was supposed to have been accomplished by the end of April.

Safety corridors are to be set up for personnel of one side to travel through territory of the other.

Step-by-step demobilization will be carried out by both sides. Both sides will establish points of entry for the replacement of war material on one-for-one basis.

All remaining military and civilian prisoners of war will be released.

Perhaps even more significant reports that Washington has applied pressure on South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu to keep his side of the bargain.

U.S. military and economic aid kept the Thieu regime afloat and gives plenty of leverage for U.S. officials to apply.

U.S. economic aid was also seen as a factor in getting Hanoi to make the Viet Cong hold to their word. President Nixon has warned indirectly of retaliation bombing.

HOW TO APPROACH JOB

Career women given hints

By MAUREEN McDONALD
State News Staff Writer

For women seeking more than a typing job after graduation, the Detroit Chapter of the National Organization of Women has some helpful hints.

A workshop, sponsored by organization members Sandra Carpenter and Lorraine Moore at a state National Organization of Women convention in the Union Saturday, outlined a "nonsexist code of ethics" and specified places where women can secure professional employment.

A woman has to project

a serious, career-minded image, Carpenter stressed.

"When you secure a job tell your manager what you want to do and where you want to go in the company," Carpenter said. "If you don't, he'll probably think you're just waiting to get pregnant and stay home — even if you're 52."

Professionalism extends to office behavior, Carpenter said.

"Professional appearance is very important to your prospective employer," Carpenter said, advised. "Funky fashions are fine if you're jazzed up to dance, but not for the office."

Carpenter advised women who are dissatisfied with company procedure to approach the management about their problems — not converse in the ladies room about it.

"When you argue with your boss, argue with facts. Whatever you do, don't cry! That defeats the purpose," Carpenter said. "Men can deal with facts, but they don't know how to deal with crying, it only reinforces the adage that women are emotional."

If all else fails, Carpenter advised women to leave a position in which they feel they cannot advance.

"Women need to break the psychological barrier with employers," she said. "Men change jobs frequently in their careers, and we need to do the same."

To enhance job-hopping, or to help a woman find her first professional job, the organization has developed a skill bank to recruit competent women and place them with nonsexist employers.

Women seeking jobs in management or professional capacities are advised to send a resume to Women's Skills Bank, Metropolitan Detroit Chapter of NOW, P.O. Box 1455, Detroit, Mich. 48231.

The Detroit chapter of the group also maintains a job opening file. Carpenter said various employers contact the organization in an effort to meet affirmative action goals.

Recruiters from IBM, Equitable Life Assurance Society, Oakland University and others have already contacted the group, she said.

Another avenue for women seeking responsible positions is a Southfield employment agency, Person Inc., she said.

"It is our belief that qualified women exist to fill the full range of occupational openings," a pamphlet from the agency reads. "Person Inc. is committed to operating with all occupational areas regardless of present or previous stereotypes."

Work Opportunities for Women, a compilation of women's groups, is also seeking qualified women to place in competent positions, it was noted at the conference.

Films, speakers and books on women and employment are available through the Detroit chapter of the National Organization of Women.

3 local radicals charge Nixon with another Watergate tactic

DETROIT (UPI) — Three Michigan radicals who were the central figures in the U.S. Supreme Court's landmark decision against governmental wiretapping Monday charged the Nixon administration with "another Watergate tactic" in a $1.25 million damage suit.

Lawrence "Pun" Plamondon, who was charged with the September 1968, bombing of a Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) office in Ann Arbor, had the case dropped against him because the Justice Dept. refused to disclose the contents of tapped telephone conversations.

John Sinclair and Jack Forest charged with conspiracy in the incident also were freed when the high court ruled the government had illegally wiretapped.

The three members of the Rainbow People's Party, formerly the White Panther Party, announced Monday that they were seeking damages for the "illegal wiretapping and the bad faith politically motivated prosecution of a case against them."

The suit charged the government with conspiring against the three in an attempt to "kill and detain them from exercising their rights to speak freely, associate and participate in political causes."

The lawsuit filed in Detroit April 2 asked for $1.25 million in compensatory and punitive damages and named President Richard Nixon; former Attorney General John Mitchell and Richard Kleindienst; former FBI director L. Patrick Gray; the estate of the late J. Edgar Hoover; and the Justice Dept. as defendants.

The suit, filed by Detroit attorney Hugh "Buck" Davis, also charged the government officials with attempting to further the judicial and public acceptance of "the so-called domestic security wiretapping policy as evidenced in the Watergate case."

SN appoints two to fill editor posts

Jane Seaberry, Chicago sophomore, has been appointed director of the State News magazine Counterpoint. She will begin at the post fall term.

Seaberry's appointment was announced Tuesday by Bill Whiting, editor-in-chief.

Counterpoint has been a monthly supplement publication to the State News focusing on in-depth coverage of news events.

Hillel elections for next year's officials will be held at 7:30 p.m. Thursday at Hillel House, 319 Hillel St. Those needing rides call 351-0545 or 485-3770.

MSU Veterans will meet at 7 p.m. today at the American Legion, East Lansing. All veterans welcome. This will probably be the last meeting if no interest is shown.

The Chess Club will meet at 8 tonight in the Union Gold room. Bring Equipment.

Seaberry has worked at the State News for two years as a campus and city desk reporter. She is currently covering the East Lansing city government.

She has worked for Chicago Today and will be an intern at the Flint Journal this summer. Seaberry is a journalism major.

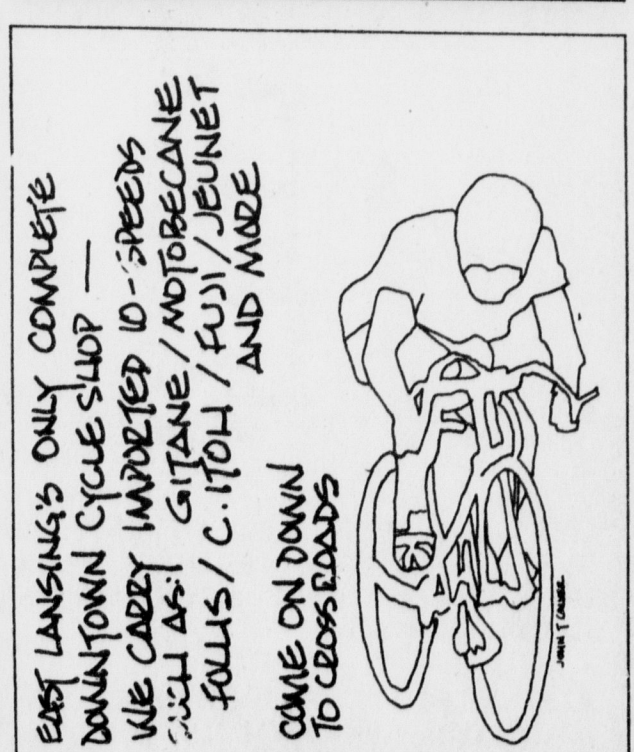

Last week Whiting also announced the appointment of Mike LaNoue, Allen Park junior, as entertainment director.

A journalism major, LaNoue has been a feature writer and environmental reporter at the State News for the past year.

LaNoue is a transfer student from Henry Ford Community College, where he was editor of the Ford Estate, the college newspaper.
