

Diesel fuel price fix ordered

Strike causes layoffs, pending food shortages

FROM WIRE SERVICES

More layoffs and pending food shortages were reported Tuesday in the increasingly violent strike by independent truckers as President Nixon froze diesel fuel prices in an effort to end the shutdown.

Locally, the strike has not yet shut down businesses.

Only three out of 10 gas stations contacted Tuesday by the State News said they were having trouble getting their usual gas shipments.

Two local grocery stores and a department store also reported no problems in getting their merchandise yet. But the operating manager of Sears & Roebuck Co. in Frandor said: "We don't know from day to day."

MSU students may have trouble buying text books next term if the strike continues, a local book store reported.

Though shortages in this area do not seem to be imminent yet, Gov. Milliken on Monday ordered state police and National Guard helicopters to start surveillance of potential trouble spots in an effort to curb truckers' strike violence.

Spokesmen for New England food stores and the nation's ninth largest food chain predicted Tuesday afternoon there may be critical shortages of meat and produce by the weekend if the shutdown, which has touched 42 states, continues.

And layoffs continued at meat packers and industries dependent upon trucking. More than 75,000 workers have been furloughed since the shutdown over diesel prices and freight rates began last Thursday.

Against that backdrop, federal energy chief William E. Simon said Tuesday afternoon that Nixon had ordered diesel fuel prices frozen until the end of February or until Congress acts to allow truckers to pass along their increased costs more quickly than they now can.

Simon also said the Federal Energy Office has directed the entire trucking industry be supplied, to the maximum extent possible, with all the diesel fuel they need. He then headed back to another Washington meeting to report the developments to representatives of the striking independents.

While a diesel price freeze and increased fuel supplies would answer some truckers' gripes, decreased revenues independent truckers have been absorbing because of skyrocketing fuel prices will continue until a pass-through of costs is arranged.

And some of the truckers have maintained they will not roll their rigs again until their losses are made up.

The energy chief also announced the administration is asking the Small Business Administration "to consider all appropriate relief to the small businessman, including truck owner-operators adversely affected by the energy crisis."

In other related developments: Petroleum industry representatives Tuesday attacked proposed oil tax changes and price rollbacks that they maintained would be counterproductive in the drive for more energy.

Simon made clear, meanwhile, that he opposes plans for a rollback in domestic oil prices.

The Senate Commerce Committee voted to speed action by the Interstate Commerce Commission to permit striking truckers to pass on their increased fuel costs.

Massachusetts will begin rationing gasoline Monday, becoming the third state to limit customers to purchases every other day, but it is a voluntary plan.

Two more major marketers, Exxon Co. USA and Gulf Oil Co. US, increased gasoline prices Tuesday.

Exxon announced an increase of 3.5 cents a gallon, Gulf 5.5 cents a gallon.

Earlier, six major oil companies had announced gasoline price increases, while Amoco Oil Co. announced on Monday that it was lowering its price for gasoline two cents a gallon.

Britain's coal strike may cripple industry

LONDON (AP) — Britain's coal miners decided Tuesday on an all-out national strike that could paralyze the country's industry by spring.

They vowed to lay down their tools Sunday. In response, Derek Ezra, chairman of the state-run National Coal Board, warned that Britain faces "a catastrophe unparalleled in our postwar industrial history."

Ezra, whose Coal Board employs the nation's 280,000 miners, urged the unions and the government to get together for last-minute talks to avert a stoppage.

But Joe Gormley, president of the National Union of Mineworkers, refused further talks unless the government "puts more cash on the table."

Employment Secretary William Whitelaw, who last year gained a reputation for conciliation in Northern Ireland, denounced the union attitude as "cash now, or else."

Prime Minister Edward Heath, answering questions in the House of Commons, charged that the miners' union had never been prepared to negotiate any aspect of their pay claim.

Announcement of the strike date by Gormley sent prices plunging to a six-year low on the London stock exchange. About $1.4 billion was wiped off the value of British-based companies. The pound sterling lost nearly two cents on the foreign exchange market, dropping to $2.24.

About 70 per cent of the nation's electricity supply comes from coal. Coal stocks are already down a third because of an overtime ban the miners have conducted since November to back up their demands for higher pay.

The Heath government put the nation on a three-day work week Jan. 1 to conserve fuel supplies. An all-out strike raises the threat of a two-day work week, further production losses, a rundown of coal supplies by late March and eventually a shutdown of British industry.

The only bright spot in the picture was an assurance from Gormley that hospitals, schools and old-age pensioners would get coal supplies even if striking miners have to deliver it themselves.

But Gormley told newsmen miners wanted other unions to ensure that supplies of energy are unable to be transported around the country freely during the strike.

Asked how long the miners were prepared to strike, Gormley replied: "As long as the members feel it is necessary."

The rank and file voted last week 81 per cent in favor of authorizing Gormley's executive to call a strike.

The Academic Council, Tuesday afternoon, critically wounded a plan to streamline academic governance at the University level.

The council approved, by a 53-32 vote, an amendment to the Report of the Ad Hoc Committee to Review Academic Governance that would allow faculty and students from outside the council, as well as council members, to sit on standing committees.

The ad hoc committee had recommended that only council members sit on the standing committees to insure better communication between council and committees and to reduce the man-hours needed to make policy decisions.

Council members had attacked the ad hoc committee's proposal as sharply limiting the diversity of viewpoint in academic governance and as creating an insupportable workload for council members who would also be forced to work on committees.

Though the council rejected the concept of staffing the standing committee from council members alone, it did not substitute a specific alternate plan for filling the committees. The author of the approved amendment, Jack Stever, College of social science representative, did not propose an alternative seating plan.

The council appointed three members, Stieber, Martin Fox, natural science representative, and Hester Cain, Justin Morrill College representative, to work with the ad hoc committee to produce an alternative seating plan.

Lester V. Manderscheid, ad hoc committee chairman, cited this lack of substitute seating arrangements as he urged council members to reject the amendment.

"While we are concerned that the amendment will pass, we are more concerned that you will approve it for different and contradictory reasons," Manderscheid said. "Some are voting to get one plan approved; others are voting to get a very different plan passed."

Rejecting the ad hoc committee's suggestion would leave the council where it started, Paul M. Hurrell, Justin Morrill College representative, said.

"Modifying our 'business-as-usual' council with some slight changes in number will not increase our effectiveness," Hurrell told council members.

But approving the ad hoc committee's proposal would severely restrict women's input into academic governance, Verna Hildebrand, College of human ecology representative, said.

"Approving the ad hoc committee's plan would eliminate the 18 faculty women serving on standing committees, leaving only the 11 women council members," Hildebrand said.

Economic woes plague MSU development

Second of an eight part series

A dark and gloomy cloud, filled with signs of impending economic misfortune, has settled over the heads of many University administrators.

The period of vast expansion and growth in higher education has ended. The end of the draft, disillusionment about a college degree's power to guarantee jobs and the general decline in the college-aged population has led to a decrease in enrollment at many universities. MSU has not yet been hit hard by this.

At MSU, new buildings no longer spring up at a furious pace and the addition of new programs no longer means old programs are safe from cutbacks.

Thus, in the early '70s, that golden age of seemingly unlimited funding appeared over and the energy crisis with its accompanying economic crunch arrived. This prompted some administrators to predict an era of declining economic fortunes for MSU.

The University's budget was generally stable last year with 70 per cent of the budget supplied by the state and only the proposed law school lacking funds.

Funds for the College of Urban Development were almost cut from the budget last year, but were reinstated at the last minute.

This year the budget proceedings are going on in the atmosphere of the economic squeeze. The appropriations bill, including money for higher education, is currently being considered by the Senate and House appropriations committees and will probably not be passed until late June.

On Jan. 18, Gov. Milliken recommended a $98.6 million budget for MSU, a 10 per cent hike over last year including $500,000 for the College of Law and $1.3 million for increased fuel costs.

Milliken also recommended cutting MSU's travel budget by 15 per cent. Recommendations for funding of the Cooperative Extension Service and Agricultural Experiment Station fell far short of MSU's requested $2.3 million to $18,000 for both programs.

MSU administrators are hopeful that they will achieve additional support for some existing programs, especially medical programs. They are also optimistic that funding for MSU's agricultural programs can be beefed up.

However, sources expect little support for new programs and say the most important new program, the law school, may again fail to be funded.

There is also concern among MSU administrators that the College of Urban Development may again run into rough waters. Many are optimistic about its chances for funding, while others see the possibilities for any funding as very dim. Many legislators have asked whether rural based MSU is the place for the college.

This budget year also provides proof that unlimited expansion of buildings is at an end. While the Clinical Sciences Building has been fully funded, sources close to the administration fear there will be no funding this year to begin construction of either the communication arts or performing arts buildings.

The State of the University February 1974 Special Report

The biggest problems facing University administrators may be convincing the legislature not to cut funding for salaries. They fear the legislature may approve only 70 per cent of the salary money requested. Some legislators feel they should only fund salaries and other programs up to the proportion of state money (70 per cent) in MSU's operating budget. This move would leave a void that student fee monies would have to fill.

"Raising tuition will be resisted by the administration and trustees," said Jack Breslin, executive vice president. "But when you are faced with the problem of maintaining the University's quality, you have to decide whether to maintain quality or keep fees low."

Fees may not be raised if savings can be made in other areas and if enrollment remains high, Breslin said. No decision on raising fees will be made until after the appropriations bill is passed.

In the area of academic programs, last year, during the pre-energy crisis period, MSU's programs underwent the usual number of changes.

Programs added to the curriculum included: Latin American studies, an experience-based secondary teacher education program, Russian and East European studies and a new specialization in cartography. Nine other programs were added. Deletions included cutting several graduate-level courses in the Dept. of History.

However, the pressures of the declining economy forced the killing of two programs. The Justin Morrill College intensive language program died because it duplicated the studies of the established language departments in Russian, French and Spanish.

The elimination of the language program was first announced last spring in an economizing move that anticipated the current belt-tightening. The South Asian language program, which included Vietnamese, was also killed because its enrollment remained too small.

In time of an economic slump, it is necessary to streamline MSU's programs while trying to keep the same quality, Dorothy Arata, asst. provost for undergraduate education, said.

"In the Justin Morrill case, we made the decision that if we have to cut, it is easiest to do it where there is clear duplication and an overall fall in enrollment in language studies," Arata said.

Fiscal constraints have been an important factor this year and will continue to be important, Arata said. These constraints make it difficult to keep making educational innovations, which are the University's life blood.

The biggest danger MSU faces is such a slowdown in innovation, she said. Financial problems could cause faculty members to cease suggesting potentially costly innovations as well as ending experimentation at a Universitywide level.

Milton Steinmueller, chairman of the curriculum committee and professor of resource development, said he is optimistic about the future of academics in the tightening economic situation. He summed up the situation facing MSU's academic units:

"A different budgetary situation will cause different kinds of priorities to be set. One would expect departments to phase out low enrollment courses and some low enrollment programs, but resources will still be diverted to units showing expansion."

And during the past year the financial aid situation has rolled between prosperous and dismal at dizzying speeds. October, for example, brought the disclosure that all funds from federal aid programs were committed for the rest of the year. This left students who applied for aid winter term and who will apply spring term without access to the Work-Study, National Direct Student Loan and Supplementary Education Opportunity Grant programs.

Nearly $5 million is distributed to more than 5,500 MSU students on those programs every year. However, the situation was not as disastrous as it appeared. Most students were able to obtain loans under a new program started fall term that made the University a direct lender. Financial aid officers estimated the loan program will allow 2,000 students to borrow up to $1,500 a year at 7 per cent interest.

The possibilities of federal funds being totally committed early fall term still exists. However, a greater worry to aid officers is whether MSU's federal aid funds will be cut.

If federal money is cut back, some officers are confident MSU can take up the slack. MSU's direct loan program and large amount of money coming in from students repaying national direct loans could help students hurt by a cutback, officers say.

The past year also brought the beginning of the Basic Education Opportunity Grant. Hailing it as the one program capable of serving all needy students, the Nixon administration tried to substitute it for the direct loan and supplemental grants by neglecting to fund them. Congress blocked the move by using basic grant funds to supply all three programs. This cut the basic grant until the average grant was reduced from an expected $806 to $206 a year.

Congress refused to kill the old programs for fear the basic grant would prove inadequate. Congressmen felt the grant's standards for eligibility were too strict.

This year Nixon is again trying the substitution and observers feel Congress will again fight the move.

Talks, Moscow trip announced

The second round of the Strategic Arms Limitation (SALT) Talks will begin Feb. 19 in Geneva, a White House communique said Tuesday.

The communique also said that Secretary of State Henry Kissinger will visit Moscow in late March to prepare for a second trip by President Nixon to the Soviet Union.

The twin developments marked a reaffirmation of a detente between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The announcement followed talks between Nixon, Kissinger and Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in Washington.

SALT II will be aimed at limiting development of offensive nuclear weapons. It is hoped that Nixon could sign an agreement at a summit with Soviet Communist Leader Leonid Brezhnev at the Kremlin in late spring or early summer.

The first SALT agreement limited the antimissile defenses of the two super powers.

Mindszenty removed by Pope

Pope Paul VI Tuesday removed Josef Cardinal Mindszenty, the crusty prelate who spent years in jail rather than bow to tyranny, as primate of Hungary and archbishop of Esztergom.

Mindszenty spent 30 of his 81 years in Nazi and Communist jails and 15 years in an asylum at the United States legation in Budapest.

The decision underscored the Pope's efforts to improve Vatican relations with Communist countries. The cardinal had turned down repeated requests that he resign.

A spokesman for Cardinal Mindszenty in Vienna, where the cardinal has lived since 1971, said the cardinal had no comment.

Sterilization damage suit filed

A $25 million damage suit was filed in the United States District Court Monday by Lonnie Relf, an Alabama black man, who has claimed that his three daughters were either sterilized or given birth control shots without his consent.

Relf and attorney Leonard J. Keipl are asking $5 million in "general damages" for each girl, aged 12, 14 and 16. They are also asking $10 million in "exemplary damages."

Defendants named in the suit include former White House aides John W. Dean III and John D. Ehrlichman and doctors who performed the operation or administered the shots.

Information concerning this and other incidents disclosed last summer prompted the government to issue new rules on sterilization Tuesday. The new rules require written consent of all patients regardless of age.

Consent will confirm that a full explanation has been given concerning surgery, discomforts, risks and benefits, alternative birth control methods and the freedom to withdraw consent.

The new rules also require approval from a local review committee and a local judge for anyone under 18 years of age even if there is parental consent.

Senator wants media reply law

A national law requiring newspapers to give political candidates the right to reply to critical stories or editorials should strongly be considered by the Senate, Sen. John L. McClellan, D - Ark., said Monday.

The law as it is now "virtually deprives public officials of the opportunity to recover damages unless they can prove malice," McClellan said.

McClellan's remarks came in response to a Supreme Court decision to uphold a 1913 law which compelled the Miami Herald to print a reply concerning its editorial attack on a candidate for the Florida legislature.

Hearst granddaughter kidnaped

The granddaughter of the late publisher William Randolph Hearst was kidnaped at gunpoint Monday night from her Berkeley, Calif. apartment, it was disclosed Tuesday.

Patricia Campbell Hearst, 19, was carried screaming from the apartment and tossed half naked into the trunk of a car, police said.

Police said her two abductors had not made any demands for ransom. Witnesses said the apartment was a shambles, with blood on the walls and a blood-soaked towel on the floor.

Her father, Randolph A. Hearst, is editor and president of the San Francisco Examiner.

FDA recalls Canadian chocolate

Canadian chocolate responsible for at least 47 cases of food poisoning in the United States is being recalled from the market, the Food and Drug Administration said Tuesday.

The U.S. Center for Disease Control said the chocolate balls, wrapped in multicolored metal foil and distributed throughout the U.S. by Triumph Candy Corp. of Englewood Cliffs, N.J., have been associated with the salmonella illness reported by public agencies.

The disease, which had been rare in this country, is characterized by fever, nausea, vomiting and diarrhea.

Nixon outlines program for national health care

FROM WIRE SERVICES

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon said Tuesday that his national health insurance proposals would strengthen the present health care system, not destroy it.

It is one, he said, under which "our entire health care system would not be placed under the heavy hand of the federal government."

Nixon gave a preview of his program in a speech to the annual convention of the American Hospital Assn.

The proposals are to be sent to Congress Wednesday in a special message.

Under his plan, Nixon said, "we would continue to rely on partnership, not paternalism."

"Let us have a program where our doctors would work for their patients, not for the federal government," he said.

Under the Nixon proposals, a three-part system would be involved:

• A special employment plan under which employer - employee contributions would cover health insurance premiums for employed persons, with the employer paying the bulk.

• A government assistance plan to cover people with low incomes and "those who can't purchase health insurance at a reasonable cost, such as those already in poor health or those whose work entails risk."

The government would pay the entire premiums for very low income persons, but those with a little more income would be expected to pay some share of the cost.

• A plan under which the existing Medicare program for persons 65 and over would be continued "but . . . would offer improved benefits matching those in the other plans."

There had been some speculation recently that the Medicare system, as such, would be discontinued.

"Coverage under all three plans would be identical," the President said.

"It would finance virtually all of the health protection people need — hospital and physician's care in and out of the hospital, drugs, laboratory tests, X-ray, medical devices, ambulance service, treatment of children, catastrophic illness and even mental illness, including alcoholism and drug abuse."

The President predicted that action on some form of national health insurance will be taken during the present session of Congress "because there is a need."

The President said that his proposal was designed to take care of high cost, catastrophic illness extending over a long period of time.

Milliken appoints district judge

By ANGELIA CARROLL
State News Staff Writer

Daniel L. Tschirhart, asst. Ingham County prosecutor, was appointed by Gov. Milliken Tuesday to replace East Lansing District Court Judge Maurice E.

Schoenberger, when Schoenberger steps down Feb. 24.

Tschirhart, 32, has been an assistant prosecutor since 1970. Tschirhart, a 1969 graduate of the Detroit College of Law, is married and has two children.

He moved to East Lansing from Lansing in September 1973.

Schoenberger became the center of controversy in June when he dismissed murder charges against former MSU student Stanley Price, 22, was accused in the March 11 stabbing of Martin Brown, an MSU junior at the time.

The decision dismissed portions of evidence which the prosecution said were essential to the case, and future attempts to bring Price to trial failed.

Schoenberger has also been well known for requiring that East Lansing residents convicted of shoplifting write essays examining their motivations for committing the crime.

The appointment of Tschirhart, who was not available for comment late Tuesday, does not require legislative confirmation.

Tschirhart will assume his duties on the bench Feb. 25. The appointment covers the unexpired portion of Schoenberger's term, which was to have ended Jan. 1, 1975. Tschirhart may run for re-election in November, 1974.

District courts have jurisdiction over civil suits up to $3,000. They also have criminal jurisdiction over misdemeanors, ordinance and charter violations and they hold preliminary examinations in felony cases.

Low priority delays tenants bills in House committee, aides report

Low priority is delaying legislative action on four major tenants rights bills lodged in the House Urban Affairs Committee. Only one of the bills has a chance of being considered in the House this month, committee aides and consultants said Tuesday.

The aides said the bills, which have been in the committee since last June, are not receiving as much attention as other bills in the committee, the results of decisions made by the committee chairman, Rep. Joseph Forbes, D - Oak Park, and other committee members.

They also said the bills will probably continue to receive low priority because of recent influx of 11 mobile home bills that the committee has decided to begin acting on. The aides denied that the committee was trying to kill the tenants rights legislation.

The only bill that has been reported out of committee, and is awaiting a redrafting by the legislative service bureau, prohibits landlords from entering a tenant's apartment without a 24 - hour notice. Failure to give notice, unless in an emergency, would constitute a $100 fine. The bill was reported out of the Urban Affairs Committee Monday.

Of the other three bills, one would force landlords to pass on to tenants interest earned from their security deposit. The other two bills would allow tenants to assemble a collective bargaining unit to negotiate rent or other policies of the landlord.

The latter bills are sponsored by reps. Perry Bullard, D - Ann Arbor, and Daisy Elliot, D - Detroit.

MSU should consider setting up health unit...

In lieu of the soaring costs of medical care in the United States in general and East Lansing in particular, MSU should seriously consider establishing a health maintenance organization (HMO) for the benefit of students and staff.

While HMOs are not going to solve all current medical care problems, they could go a long way toward diminishing them for many people.

HMOs are, basically, health insurance programs taken a step further. Health insurance companies contract directly with their customers to pay back costs of medical services. HMOs not only enroll customers, but contract directly to provide health services at a fixed rate.

HMOs shift emphasis in medical care from defensive care to preventive care. Instead of rushing care to a patient who is seriously ill, under an HMO plan doctors worry more about preventing these illnesses from ever getting started.

Another facet of the HMO plan is special medical care. Under the current system, if a person needs special care it is up to him to secure a physician and his health insurance pays only after his illness is treated. In an HMO plan, it will be the responsibility of the health unit to get a person special care because he has already paid for it.

The concept of a prepaid health plan is not new to MSU. In 1971, there were plans to study, if not actually implement, this type of program.

Unfortunately, the plan fell through. Staff and faculty were not willing to abandon their current health plan and students just were not interested.

But now there has been renewed interest in health maintenance organizations. There will be a seminar in Washington, D.C., on Feb. 11 and 12 to explore the costs, setup and what the legislation on HMOs is really all about.

A group from MSU, including doctors from the colleges of Human and Osteopathic Medicine and the University Health Center, will attend this conference.

HMOs are not a cure - all for the medical crisis currently facing America. But the shift from defensive to preventive medicine heralds a landmark in health care.

The University must carefully study the findings and information that comes out of the HMO seminar in Washington, D.C., next week and utilize this information in setting up a comprehensive health program for faculty, staff and students.

'ARE YOU COVERED BY HOSPITALIZATION AT THE PRESENT TIME? AND IF SO, WHAT KIND AND HOW MUCH...?'

The Doctor's Bag

By ARNOLD WERNER, M.D.

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at MSU Health Center. Names need not be included unless a personal reply is requested.

Earlier this evening, I began to get some severe pains in my lower abdomen. In order to relieve this I went to the bathroom and tried to have a bowel movement. I continued to have the pains, and, as I was sitting there, I blacked out momentarily.

As I came to, my legs were extended and locked, as were my arms. I could not move them and I could not speak though I was trying. My head cleared rapidly and in a few seconds everything was normal. A moment later I was able to have a bowel movement and I felt completely normal except that I felt very weak. When I came to, I had a similar feeling as when you suddenly stand up and become dizzy. This has never happened before. What I would like to know is, what caused the blackout?

Occasional cramping abdominal pain is a common occurrence experienced by almost everyone and in itself has no clinical significance. Such pains are common with gastrointestinal viruses, excessive gas production because of the consumption of a particular food, anxiety, or simply eating food which produces an idiosyncratic reaction.

Speaking of idiosyncratic reactions and keeping with the nostalgia renaissance, your passing out on the pot reminded me of "Jezebel," a 1950s song by Frankie Lane. The version I recalled was titled "Hemorrhoids" and started with the refrain: "I was such a fool for straining at the stool." Any local nostalgia buff should be able to hum the melody for you. The passing out occurs when you take deep breaths and then bear down without exhaling. This maneuver does increase intraabdominal pressure and facilitates a bowel movement. However, when done repeatedly with vigor, it also temporarily decreases blood flow to the brain and causes syncope (fainting). The stiff arms and legs were also probably due to the overbreathing.

Passing out is not conducive to good health, especially in bathrooms which have notoriously hard floors. The solution to your problem should be obvious. If the fainting recurs anyway, a physician should be consulted.

My problem is that my boyfriend is oversexed. Everytime we go out somewhere all he wants to do is go back to my room and tell my roommate to get lost. I do love him very much, but I don't want anything to affect our relationship. How can I stifle him without this affecting us?

From your letter it is quite clear that it is already affecting you and is jeopardizing your relationship. Therefore, it seems necessary to deal with the situation directly with him.

There are several components to the problem. One clearly is the amount of your boyfriend's sexual interest. Another is the amount of your sexual interest. A third is your boyfriend's way of dealing with the situation, which includes interfering in your relationship with your roommate, with whom you have to get along many more hours of the week than you do your boyfriend.

It is not uncommon that younger men have a greater interest in sexual activity than women, or that they are less affected by fatigue and other factors in the expression of this interest. What is uncommon is that the man understands that there may be a difference between his sexual interest and his partner's interest, and that the difference is not related to her lack of love for him.

You might begin by talking about the bind that he is putting you in by his behavior and, at the same time, reinforce the fact that you do love him and enjoy being with him in situations other than back in your room. Assuming that you care for him for some very good reasons, you might point out some of these other reasons as a means of providing further reassurance.

The open sharing of concerns and issues that make one partner or the other unhappy may be the crucial factor in making a relationship work over a period of time. Unfortunately, this is more easily said than done.

...and state legislators need to act on HMOs

To help ease the medical cost crunch, state government has also shown a renewed interest in the concept of health maintenance organizations.

Gov. Milliken's office has already drawn up one bill to establish both profit and nonprofit HMOs. The bill has been introduced jointly by the Senate and House Social Services Committee.

State Rep. Perry Bullard, D - Ann Arbor, has also introduced a bill concerning HMOs. His bill calls for a 50 per cent consumer representation on each HMO governing board and for services to be made available to all citizens. The bill also calls for regular public reports on the performance of an HMO.

But there are political complications holding up the formation of statewide HMOs. A 1939 law that established Blue Cross and Blue Shield, restricts any group from starting a profit-making HMO. Legislation must first be passed that would allow HMOs to be established on a profit-making basis before any widespread use is made of health maintenance organizations.

Another major block in the path of HMO legislation is that for some lawmakers health bills of this type have very little "sex appeal." The specialized nature of these bills make them very difficult for legislators to acquire a working knowledge of the concept of the bill and very hard for constituents of these legislators to support the bills.

Michigan lawmakers are faced with a monumental task in preparing HMO legislation that will be both politically and socially acceptable. But this task must be quickly faced and conquered.

It is time for the state legislature to put the clamps on these rising costs and work toward establishing legislation allowing HMOs to grow on a statewide level.

Only ordinance can control residence hall noise

To the Editor: I feel that the editorial "Let peers curb noise" in Tuesday's State News deserves comment, for it offers apparently simple, idealistic solutions to a complex problem.

The solution given by the writer would, of course, be preferred if it worked, but the problem with the entire editorial is that it is much too idealistic. The need for establishing a University-wide noise ordinance for residence halls has arisen due to the ineffectiveness of peer pressure in dealing with the problem of noise.

For peer pressure to be feasible, it takes the cooperation of an entire living unit. For peer pressure to be useless, it takes only one resident who is devoid of consideration for those around him.

Obviously, if all people responded by respecting the rights of others, such a noise ordinance would not be a necessity. But all too often, a student who asks the person across the hall to turn down the stereo at 3 a.m. on a Saturday morning is told to go to hell. After you argue in favor of having your rights respected and are rebuffed, where do you turn?

These are questions with which residence hall staff must constantly deal, and speaking for myself, I would welcome some legal backing for this common problem.

I also take exception to the implications contained in the editorial that the residence halls operate totally outside the framework of the University. The "extension of University control" which you speak of pejoratively may not have the effect of keeping students from voluntarily electing to live in residence halls.

Instead, since 40 per cent of students who left residence halls this summer did so due to reasons of noise (the figure cited by Gary North), such an ordinance might well have the effect of enticing more students to live in University housing, with the assurance that their sleep and studies will not suffer.

Moreover, I question the omniscience of the editorial writer who in the last line suggests that, even before such a rule has been written, or in fact even decided upon, that it will be poorly enforced. Do you know something that I don't?

James P. Thompson

Peer pressure will not eliminate noise

To the Editor: I must take exception with your recent editorial advocating "peer pressure" as the appropriate method for resolving noise disruptions in residence halls. While I agree that in the ideal situation self-regulation, self-discipline and peer pressure are the preferred approaches, they are not currently successful in controlling problems of noise.

Peer pressure is applied in a variety of ways and currently the pressure seems to be greater from people engaged in thoughtless and inconsiderate noise-making activity. Additionally, there is a strong pressure among students to be accepted by their peers.

In attempting to gain acceptance and approval, individuals will often compromise other needs and interests or tolerate irritants which may jeopardize their personal or academic welfare.

Two examples come to mind which occur with regularity. The first is the situation where a group of students are attending class in hall A, and are being disrupted from adjacent halls B and C by stereos being played at high volume. It is virtually impossible to locate and identify such disruptive sources and bring pressure to bear which reduces the problem.

The second is people congregated for social reasons are requested to hold down the noise by some individual who needs to sleep or study. On some occasions, the larger group cooperates, but in too many situations, harassment, intimidation, retaliation and verbal and physical abuse are directed toward the person asking the group to reduce the disruption.

It is for such reasons as these that I argue peer pressure is not sufficient to deal with the problem at the current time.

Negative ideas cast doubt on Health Action League

To the Editor: Paula Holmes' Jan. 31 article on Health Maintenance Organization's (HMOs) has caused me a great deal of personal anguish.

I have never met Holmes, nor have I ever been interviewed by her. I was interviewed by phone by another State News reporter who apparently passed along some of my ideas. However, torn from context and couched in language which is certainly not mine, I found the quotes attributed to me completely unrecognizable.

These quotes are extremely offensive and do not in any way reflect my opinions or the attitudes of the group I represent, the Health Action League.

In paragraphs in which the Health Action League is mentioned, there are many inaccuracies. To wit:

- There is no Health Maintenance Organization in Ann Arbor.
- The Health Action League is not currently applying for a federal grant.

• Were the Health Action League to get into HMO development, it would not appeal to MSU "to subsidize students, staff and faculty."

In addition to being misleading and inaccurate, the article was incomplete in its description of the health league. The Health Action League comprises a group of concerned citizens who are interested in improving the health care delivery system.

To this end, we testified at two legislative hearings on proposed HMO legislation in Michigan, and we are currently studying the feasibility of HMO development in Ingham County.

Like others in the Health Action League, I believe that development of HMOs can only be achieved through cooperative efforts of both providers and users of health service. We do not subscribe to the negative views attributed to me in the article.

Tenure threat far away?

To the Editor: In your Wednesday article, "Tenure threatened by money pinch," I read with some chagrin, though not surprise, the paraphrased statement by Herman King, asst. provost for academic administration.

King apparently has said that "MSU has enough graduate assistants and temporary instructional staff to make any threat to the persons in the tenure stream a long way off."

Such a statement certainly seems to imply that "persons in the tenure stream" have a corner on protection by this University. How noble! But then, those of us who have gone the route of graduate assistantships and temporary instructorships know exactly what the means and how crass that nobility is.

"Don't worry, we can always lay off the lackeys. We do not owe them anything." Such an attitude by the University assumes that the attainment of tenure most often means competence and enthusiasm in teaching. Right, King?

Or is it easier and less of a threat to the status quo to ignore the fact that it does not always mean that?

COGS draws criticism by axing plan for council

By PAT NARDI
State News Staff Writer

ASMSU officials, Academic Council members and the vice president for student affairs all criticized the Council of Graduate Students (COGS), Tuesday after their rejection of the University Advisory Council proposal.

The proposed council would have been made up of 14 students, faculty and alumni who would meet with the board of trustees once a term as a resource group representing the whole University.

Ed Grafton, president of ASMSU, and Lawrence Bartrem, his executive assistant, said they were not pleased with the rejection.

"I think it's the sort of thing you can expect when someone elects officers at this time of the year like COGS has," Grafton said. "They like to get attention by voicing opinions about new issues."

COGS did not want alumni included on the council because it feared students needs would not be met.

Nonnamaker said the council would have allowed better communication to develop between students, faculty and trustees.

"I think if the new officers were more familiar with the issues they would have voted differently."

Fred Horne, a member of the Academic Council who helped author the proposal, said, "They don't know what they are doing."

He added that there is a need to sit down and talk to them.

Eldon Nonnamaker, vice president of student affairs, voiced disappointment that the proposal did not pass.

He defended the inclusion of alumni on the council, saying the six alumni who are trustees were elected as politicians — not alumni — and that they do not represent alumni views.

"I really think it is a viable and reasonable proposal that could do the thing that students and faculty want done," he said.

Horne reasoned that alumni could improve the student lot because they have been through MSU and know what students face.

Suit filed to void utility rate hike

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

Atty. Gen. Frank J. Kelley filed suit Tuesday seeking a reversal of the $45.7 million electric rate increase granted the Detroit Edison Co. Jan. 4. Kelley asked for a rollback of the rate increases, which average 7 per cent, and $9.6 million worth of appliance repair charges also approved by the Michigan Public Service Commission. He also asked that Edison be ordered to refund all funds collected due to the rate hike.

Joining with Kelley as co-plaintiffs in the suit were Wayne County and the cities of Detroit, Ferndale, Grosse Pointe Woods, Grosse Pointe Park, Livonia, Harper Woods and Highland Park.

The suit was filed in Ingham County Circuit Court.

Kelley, a consistent opponent of utility rate hikes, noted that the $45.7 million rate hike was in addition to the $45.2 million rate increase approved for Edison in August 1972. The latest increase was the largest electric rate hike ever approved by the PSC.

The attorney general also noted that on the latest rate hike, commission member William R. Ralls dissented from the majority opinion. He said the service commission's technical staff also had advised against a rate hike.

Anyone who ventured outside early Tuesday morning was indeed unfortunate, as the mercury had plunged to a near-record low of 18 degrees below zero shortly after midnight.

Though the record Lansing low for February 5 is a 1918 reading of 21 degrees below zero, Tuesday's low was the coldest so far this winter, an official of the National Weather Service at Capital City Airport said.

The freezing temperature, caused by a high pressure center and arctic air moving in from the north, was well under the forecast low of zero to 5 below, he added.

Farmers' tax relief bill delayed

By UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

The state senate delayed a vote Monday night on a measure designed to slow the spread of suburban development over prime farmland because of some senators' concern over the bill's cost.

The legislation, written by Sen. Harry A. De Maso, R - Battle Creek, would give an estimated $6 million annually in property tax relief to farmers and owners of open lands who agree not to allow their property to be developed for a minimum of 10 years.

Sen. Charles O. Zollar, powerful Appropriations Committee chairman, vigorously objected to amendments placed on the bill last week which he said would run the total cost of the measure to the "astronomical figure" of $25 million a year.

"I think this is the most asinine thing I've seen in the 10 years I've been here," Zollar said.

Supporters of the amendments said they were strictly procedural and would not cost any more money.

The Senate agreed Monday to take up the measure today to provide more time for study.

FACULTY VIEWPOINT

The sudden announcement last month of a tenure freeze for the coming year blew like a chill wind through MSU faculty ranks. There has since been remarkably little overt response. Instead, concern over the freeze seems to have surfaced in the form of intensified opposition to the modifications proposed by the Ad Hoc Committee on Academic Governance currently being debated in the Academic Council.

"Mirror, Mirror on the Wall..."

On the other hand, the firing of 104 faculty and staff at Southern Illinois University at Carbondale has raised considerable outcry here on campus. Those fired included 28 tenured and 28 untenured faculty members, plus 38 non-teaching staff members. All lost their jobs as a result of a five percent budget cut recommended late last November by the Illinois Board of Higher Education. Falling enrollments were the direct cause of the cuts. Department chairmen were ordered by the administration to trim their staffs in time for notification letters to be sent out in December informing the 104 they would be out of their jobs next June.

The university then filed an unprecedented class-action suit against six "representative" persons among those fired. The suit aims to prevent suits by employees against the university and, also, resort to internal grievance procedures. The university has requested the Jackson County circuit court to certify that a bona fide "financial exigency" necessitates the firings.

President David R. Denge asserts that Southern Illinois is suing because "we felt this was the most humane way we could get a determination of the rights of all parties in the case." The spokesman for those sued differs, Robert R. Harrell, associate professor of English and president of the local chapter of AAUP declares, "I feel as though I'm being sued for no damned reason other than that I'm being fired." (For further details: THE CHRONICLE OF HIGHER EDUCATION, January 14, 1974; TIME, January 28, 1974)

Harrell pointed out the lack of due process accompanying the firings, which were, he said, requested, not ordered by the Board. Moreover, he noted, "there has been no granting of hearings, no effort to try to keep faculty on."

... Who Is the Fairest One of All?"

Purists insist that tenure applies only to academic freedom. But implicit has been the assumption that tenure indicates seniority, a form of job security that during financial emergencies those with fewer years of service lose their positions before those with more. But if Southern Illinois wins its suit even that fragile form of job security will be stripped from tenure.

Before the firings no faculty consultation was requested and no alternatives to the firings apparently were suggested. The decision was made swiftly and out went the order: "Off with their heads!" Then the "humane" law suit was instituted to make the order stick.

Granted, most universities might be reluctant to follow the example set by Southern Illinois. But if the example becomes a legal precedent the reluctance could diminish, for under the pressure of diminishing income, who are more vulnerable than unorganized faculty members?

Collective Bargaining Recommended

MSUFA urges that those who voted against collective bargaining in last year's election reconsider. Collective bargaining does guarantee due process and full legal protection of contract provisions. It does protect academic freedom quality with job security. At the very least it can assure that faculty wishes and priorities cannot be ignored during economic crises. It is becoming increasingly clear that tenure, unadvised, protects neither when the economic chips are down. Collective bargaining can be adapted flexibly and insidiously to conform to faculty aims and needs.

Grapplers to face U-M Friday

The match pitting the only two undefeated major college wrestling powers in the nation against each other, MSU vs. the University of Michigan, has been rescheduled for 7:30 p.m. Friday in Jenison Fieldhouse.

There will also be a JV match between U - M and MSU beginning at 5 p.m.

The decision was made Tuesday morning following confirmation by U - M wrestling coach Rick Bay.

Bay, whose team outwrestled the University of Oklahoma Monday night, 17 - 15, questioned whether his team could be physically ready and make the weight requirements by Friday.

To alleviate that problem, the Wolverines have been given a two pound weight allowance to compensate for the lack of time in preparing for the match.

An agreement between Peninger and Bay was made prior to the announcement of the rescheduling of the match. Bay asked that the announcement be held off for psychological reasons until his team had wrestled Oklahoma.

The Spartans opted to move the match from Saturday to Friday when the facilities at Jenison Fieldhouse would be available. The Spartan Relays will be held in the fieldhouse Saturday.

As many as 6,000 people are expected to attend Friday's renewal of the intrastate rivalry.

Spartan heavyweight Larry Avery set the stage for a key match at heavyweight with U - M's Gary Ernst Friday as he defeated Oklahoma State's Tom Hazell in the coaches' east - west wrestling match in Stillwater, Okla., Monday. The score was 8 - 3.

Maravich gets 'vacation'

ATLANTA (UPI) — "Pistol" Pete Maravich, the Atlanta Hawks' high scoring guard, was suspended "indefinitely" Tuesday by coach Cotton Fitzsimmons, who would only say that he and Pete were meeting on Thursday to discuss the matter.

Fitzsimmons said the suspension was for "disciplinary reasons" but refused to give specifics. It was the first such action ever taken against the three - year NBA veteran from Louisiana State University.

Fitzsimmons reportedly has been unhappy about Maravich's defensive play. One Hawks player, who asked not to be identified, said the suspension "was not unexpected."

for drafting Michigan ballplayers, selecting defensive back Simpson in the seventh round and linebacker Nester in the 14th round. Holt, a running back, was picked in the 19th round by Birmingham.

Flash—back to '50s scene again

By DAVE Di MARTINO
State News Reviewer

A flash from the '50s hit the Brewery Monday night — a Flash Cadillac to be exact. Flash Cadillac and the Continental Kids staged a show that was one of the more unusual presentations that this area has seen in quite a while. The group, which has achieved some semblance of national fame due to its appearance as Herbie and the Heartbeats in the film "American Graffiti," bases its entire act upon visual and musical parody of the '50s era. So, understandably, few were alarmed when six greasers in black leather jackets, wearing sunglasses and sporting D.A.s, stormed the stage and began wildly playing such tunes as "Who was that Man?" and "Rock Around the Clock."

The concept of '50s revival music is not particularly new to East Lansing. Local establishments have often hosted the likes of Vince Vance and the Valiants, Little Ziggie and the Zue and others, all of whom make their living exploiting the "good old days."

It's unfortunate that most of these groups rarely have sufficient talent to come across as anything other than musical comedians. Few are really capable of much other than eliciting laughs from a slightly intoxicated audience. Flash Cadillac and his group were not that much different. It does not make a lot of sense to musically analyze an act such as Flash Cadillac's. The band was certainly adequate as musicians, but the group's first and foremost duty appeared to be nothing more than simply entertaining the crowd. And that, to be sure, was done very well at the Brewery.

Flash Cadillac and the Continental Kids have just about done all that they could possibly do.

Along with all this music comes a barrage of total '50s offensiveness, which includes feigned nose-picking, teenage obscenity and other gross-outs. The band consists of Flash on lead guitar, Spider on saxophone, Sticks on drums, Spike on rhythm guitar, Butch on bass and Angelo on piano — a true greasy lineup. There are few complaints about the show, other than that the break between sets was unusually long.

Those who bought tickets obviously wanted to see and hear music from the '50s, and they did. Which is probably why the group was so eagerly called back for an encore.

The group will be releasing its second album very shortly on Epic Records. Look for that and look for the group itself to appear this Friday on NBC's "Midnight Special."

COGS urged to accept tax plan if offered by IRS

A tax lawyer for the Council of Graduate Students has recommended that COGS accept an offer from the Internal Revenue Service that would resolve the graduate teaching assistant tax problem.

Beth Andrus, former COGS president, told representatives Monday night that the lawyer said COGS should accept the offer if the IRS is willing to extend it.

The offer, reached at a meeting between IRS representatives, Acting Graduate School Dean Clarence Minkel and Asst. Comptroller Bob Lockhart, provides that graduate teaching assistants will not be taxed above the amount normally paid to a nonstudent teaching assistant.

For example, an unmarried graduate teaching assistant has an assistantship which the University would ordinarily pay a nonstudent $1,800 to teach. Because the graduate student is single, he has a $2,050 standard personal deduction. So the student would not have to pay any tax unless he receives over $3,850.

Andrus told representatives at the meeting not to act as tax advisers and that any graduate student with questions should call the COGS office and ask to be put in touch with the tax lawyer.

Lockhart said Tuesday that the offer will not be implemented until it is examined and accepted by both the University and COGS.

Governor urges review of new teacher strike bill

Gov. Milliken urged school administrators Monday night to closely review proposed legislation designed to reduce the threat of teacher strikes, while permitting walkouts as a last resort.

Addressing a conference of the Michigan Assn. of School Boards at Kellogg Center, Milliken brought up a bill introduced in the House last week as a potential means to cut down on the number of school strikes that hit the state each fall.

Under current law, teacher strikes are considered illegal. However, court opinions have made the law difficult to enforce. At one point this past fall, 26 Michigan school districts were strikebound.

Thieves strike local businesses

Six East Lansing businesses in the 100 block of West Grand River Ave. were struck by thieves early Tuesday morning. Approximately $2,300 in cash and merchandise were taken in the thefts, police said.

The robberies took place between 3:30 and 4:57 a.m. The thieves took approximately $200 from Assiff Studio of the Dance, a $70 calculator from College Travel, $10.25 in quarters from Gibson's bookstore, and $2,025 in merchandise from George Toth Custom Tailoring.

Ehinger Realty Co. and Yat Wah Restaurant were also entered, but nothing was taken, police said.

Police are continuing their investigation, but have no suspects.
