Turkish forces take over part of Cyprus

By ASSOCIATED PRESS

Turkish tanks moved into the key port of Famagusta on Thursday evening, establishing a line from the capital of Nicosia to the east coast of the island, 35 miles away, and putting the northeastern part of Cyprus in Turkish hands.

The Turkish Cypriot radio said Turkish forces also captured the Greek Cypriot naval base in the Boghaz area 10 miles north of Famagusta, and began an assault on Lefka on the western part of the island.

The United Nations Security Council quickly issued its fourth appeal for a Cyprus cease-fire since Turkish invasion forces landed on the eastern Mediterranean island nearly a month ago.

All 15 council members joined in support of the latest appeal for an end to the fighting.

Turkish forces were also attacking the eastern and western approaches of Nicosia, apparently in an attempt to circle the city. The assaults seemed to be part of a plan to slice off the northern third of Cyprus for an autonomous Turkish region.

As Turkish forces advanced, the United States reaffirmed support Wednesday for Turkish Cypriot autonomy while confining its role in the Cyprus crisis to seeking a cease-fire and a resumption of peace talks.

"We do believe autonomy is the way of assuring the protection and well being of the Turkish community," said a State

Dept. spokesman.

President Ford led the U.S. government in urging immediate compliance with the third United Nations cease-fire resolution, shattered Wednesday night by a heavy Turkish air and ground attack.

The Pentagon reported no suspension of arms shipments to Turkey.

The State Dept., which is directing policy under Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, declined to say whether a cutoff was even considered.

The U.S.S. Little Rock, flagship of the U.S. Sixth Fleet, left the port of Gaeta, Italy, apparently to bolster the U.S. naval presence in the Mediterranean because of the Cyprus fighting. Originally, the warship had been set to sail in the first few days of September.

Greek Cypriot leadership on the island was pondering possible concessions to the Turks. "We are in a desperate situation, ready to clutch at any straw to save ourselves or preserve as much as we can," a senior Cypriot government official said.

In Athens, Premier Constantine Karamanlis said in a broadcast speech an "armed confrontation is impossible due to distance as well as the known accomplished fact" — an apparent reference to the strong Turkish position on Cyprus.

Greece is 300 miles from Cyprus, which lies only 45 miles off Turkey.

The Nicosia fighting shattered a cease-fire agreed to by both sides Wednesday night. The lull lasted only through the hours of darkness.

Intermittent Turkish air attacks were reported throughout the day against Nicosia, and around the Turkish enclave of Kokkina on the northwest coast 45 miles from the capital.

Unconfirmed reports said the Turkish forces around the capital captured the township of Myrtou 20 miles northwest of Nicosia and were advancing toward the large town of Morphou six miles to the south.

Famagusta, the second largest city on Cyprus and its most important port, is 35 miles east of Nicosia. Lefka is 20 miles west of the capital.

"Famagusta is freed, long live Turkish Famagusta," the Turkish radio announcer said in an excited, jubilant tone. He said the Turkish residents of the city had already started celebrating their "liberation," but didn't elaborate.

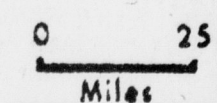

The Greek Cypriot radio said, "Our troops fought bravely under the pressure of the enemy and are moving toward new positions."

Officials said more than 12,000 Greek Cypriot men, women and children have fled from their homes before the Turkish advance and have taken shelter in British bases on Cyprus.

They said most of them came from Famagusta, pouring down the roads into the British base of Dhekelia, 17 miles from the embattled port city.

Associated Press correspondent Peter Arnett reported from Famagusta that Turkish tanks rolled into the outskirts of the city at mid-afternoon.

He said the news of the Turkish approach apparently had gone ahead because many Greek soldiers were running through the streets, away from the advance.

Nixon called as witness by cover-up trial defense

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former President Richard M. Nixon, named as an indicted co-conspirator in the Watergate cover-up case, was subpoenaed Thursday to testify as a defense witness, as the special prosecutor joined in a call for delay of the trial.

Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski asked U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica to delay the trial scheduled for Sept. 9, "in view of the circumstances affecting the trial preparation of all parties."

He asked for the continuance "for a reasonable period of time."

Two of the defendants had made a similar request and Ehrlichman had asked for a delay of at least two months.

The subpoena, to be delivered personally to Nixon at his San Clemente, Calif., home, was signed by an attorney for John Ehrlichman, formerly among the most powerful men in the Nixon White House.

Ehrlichman is one of six defendants accused of trying to smother the original investigation of the break-in at the Democratic National Committee headquarters more than two years ago.

The subpoena calls on Nixon to appear at the courthouse at 9:30 a.m. Sept. 5, the latest starting date for the trial, "and to remain until called."

The Watergate cover-up defendants had asked for a delay because of the publicity surrounding the case, especially Nixon's resignation last week.

But Jaworski said there was no need to consider the pretrial publicity issue, since his office needs time to review and transcribe the 55 tapes that have been turned over to Sirica for a review of relevance.

Sirica expects to complete that review by the end of the week and has already turned over more than half of the subpoenaed conversations to Jaworski's office. He has scheduled a hearing for Monday on the postponement issue.

With three of the defendants joined by Jaworski in a call for postponement, it was likely Sirica would agree.

Whatever Jaworski's reasons requesting postponement, the effect would be to make it possible for Nixon, if indicted, to stand with the other defendants.

A spokesman for Jaworski said Friday the special prosecutor's only reason for the motion was to allow more time to review the new presidential tapes turned over within the last week.

Jaworski told Sirica: "It seems only fair that the defendants be afforded a reasonable opportunity to listen to the tapes, verify the accuracy of the government's transcripts and integrate this material into their trial strategy."

Aides to Jaworski have said any decision on whether to prosecute Nixon is still weeks away. Whether a subpoena seeking Nixon as a defense witness may speed that decision is not clear.

The grand jury which indicted the other defendants is still sitting.

Nixon is free to challenge the subpoena in court. There was no immediate reaction from the former president.

Besides Ehrlichman, those to be tried in the cover-up case are former White House chief of staff H.R. Haldeman, former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, former Nixon re-election committee attorney, Kenneth W. Parkinson, former Asst. Atty. Robert C. Mardian and former White House aide Gordon Strachan.

Ehrlichman, 49, is charged with conspiring to obstruct justice and three counts of lying to Watergate investigators.

There was no sign that any of the other defendants are anxious to have Nixon in court as a witness.

A California lawyer, Dean Butler, has been handling some personal affairs for Nixon, but there has been no indication that he or any other lawyer has been asked to defend the former president in Watergate-related matters. Butler could not be reached Thursday.

MSU medical college sued over admissions

By DIANE SILVER
State News Staff Writer

A student rejected by MSU's Osteopathic College last June filed suit Wednesday charging the school's admissions policy is based on "political considerations."

Lewis Wagner, a 1972 MSU graduate in zoology, filed suit in U.S. District Court in Detroit seeking to be admitted to the osteopathic school. If that suit fails, he will sue for punitive damages, his lawyer said.

The suit charges that the "admissions policy violated due process and equal protection because it is arbitrary and capricious and is based on political considerations which are improper."

The first hearing on the suit will be Friday, Aug. 23.

Myron Magen, dean of the school, and MSU were named as co-defendants in the suit.

Magen said he had no comment.

"If something is in court it is not judicious for me to make a comment," Magen said.

Wagner was an alternate for admission in 1973 but the college did not renew his status this year.

As an alternate, he was given a number and placed on a list. An alternate is a student who qualifies for admission but because of space limitations cannot be admitted to the school. If a student already accepted cancels out, the first alternate is accepted, if a second student cancels, the second alternate is accepted and so on down the list.

Wagner's lawyer noted that the school at first, refused to give Wagner a reason for this year's rejection.

"They finally said it was something about his interview but didn't say what it was," the lawyer said. "If one looks at this thing with a critical eye one can see it is a catchall excuse."

On July 12, the State News disclosed that Magen had personally admitted 20 percent of the 1974-75 class to MSU's osteopathic school. Though Magen, as dean, has the power under MSU bylaws to admit all the students to the school, the large number of special admissions this year set off a storm of protest in the school.

He personally admitted 17 out of a class of 85. Nearly 2,000 students were vying for places in the school.

In a July 3 interview with the State News Magen said he personally admitted the students in an attempt to correct inequities in an admissions process that must choose 85 students out of a pool of several hundred equally qualified applicants.

"But let's not be altruistic," Magen said, "in some instances there is a political motivation."

Magen said the students he admitted were just as qualified as students admitted under the regular process and noted that the grade point averages of the specially admitted students were only a few points below the regularly admitted students.

Normally admissions to the college are handled by a committee of faculty and students. In a dean's admission, Magen may overrule the committee and admit a candidate the committee has rejected.

COMPROMISE ENDS LEGISLATIVE STALEMATE

Ford scores trade reform breakthrough

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford scored a major legislative breakthrough on Monday, forging a tentative compromise on a trade reform act long stalled over opposition of Soviet Jews.

After a White House breakfast with Ford, the senators who had led the opposition to the legislation originally sought by President Nixon, credited Ford's "intervention" with breaking the stalemate.

The compromise jelled as Ford, nearing the end of his first week as President, moved through another rapid-fire series of meetings amid these developments:

• Ford called his economic advisers into the Cabinet Room to chart what aides said would be a distinct economic policy bearing the new president's imprint.

• Ford said his decision on a vice presidential nominee would come "no earlier than the weekend." Sources who said that the announcement probably won't come until next week added that if Ford has made up his mind on the nomination, "he's not told anyone."

• The President declared through his spokesman that Nixon's White House chief of staff Alexander M. Haig Jr., will remain "for the indefinite duration," but indications mounted that a slimmed-down staff structure would find him sharing power with others.

• Ford named his college roommate and first law partner, Philip Buchen, as White House counsel as he moved to dismantle Nixon's Watergate defense team.

• A presidential spokesman said Ford "strongly urges immediate compliance" with a U.N. cease-fire resolution on Cyprus. Ford also added his personal backing to a State Dept. statement that the United States disapproves of the Turkish military action there.

• The President told a meeting of county officials that he would veto mass transit legislation now being debated by the House if it called for spending $20 billion, but urged that a less-expensive compromise be reached.

The trade legislation first proposed by Nixon after his 1972 Soviet summit called for the continuation of investment credits to the Kremlin and the granting of most-favored-nation (MFN) trade status to the Communist superpower.

But senators led by Henry Jackson, D-Wash., forced a stalemate by obtaining broad support for an amendment prohibiting MFN status unless the Soviets relaxed their restrictions on Jews wanting to leave the country.

After their scrambled eggs and English muffins breakfast with Ford and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger, Jackson and the other two senators — Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., and Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., indicated the compromise would take this form:

The President would be granted discretionary authority to grant MFN status for a limited period of time in return for a Soviet agreement to end harassment and allow large numbers of Jews to apply for exit visas to leave the country.

Specific details remain to be worked out, but Jackson told newsmen "we are moving in the direction of an agreement, and there has been significant Russian movement."

The Senator said Soviet ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin returned early from a trip to the Soviet Union, apparently with word that Soviet officials were interested in working out a compromise to gain the trade preferences.

All three senators stressed that the Jackson amendment was not being dropped, contending its objectives will be written into the legislation which now could reach Ford's desk before congressional adjournment.

Later in the morning, Ford witnessed the swearing-in of former Virginia congressman John O. Marsh Jr., as a Cabinet-rank White House counselor.

Marsh, who is a member of a four-men team of advisers helping shape Ford's White House operation, said the group's report would go to the President early next week.

Haig will be a central figure in the Ford staff, the President's spokesman stressed as they rejected reports he would be replaced by Donald Rumsfeld, now U.S. ambassador to NATO but helping with the White House transition.

Trustees OK budget, 8% wage increases

By DIANE SILVER
State News Staff Writer

The MSU Board of Trustees approved a 15 to 25 cent hourly wage increase for student employees Thursday night.

In a special meeting called to approve the University's 1974-75 operating budget, the trustees approved a minimum 8 per cent across the board salary increase for faculty, staff and student employees.

The increase will raise salaries for some 7,000 to 8,000 student employees from the present $1.90 to $3.13 hourly range up to $2.05 to $3.38.

Undergraduate assistant stipends were increased from $2.07 to $4 an hour. Graduate assistant stipends increases ranged from $177.78 a month to $1,033.33.

All student wage increases take effect fall term.

Salary increases for faculty and administrative personnel of 8 per cent plus merit increases were also approved by the board. Those increases will be included in August paychecks.

Almost 78 per cent of the $149 million operating budget approved by the board was allocated for salaries, wages and fringe benefits.

Revenue sources for the budget were the state legislature — $99 million, the federal government — $8.3 million, student fees — $33.3 million and $895,000 from investments.

Though that $895,000 from investments represents an increase in revenue, inflation will more than eat it up, Roger Wilkinson, vice president for business and finance, said. An extra $1.5 million added to the budget to account for the inflation will only partially solve the problem, he said.

"Funds were not available to meet the full rate of inflation," he said. "Consequently, the purchasing power of the operating budgets is substantially reduced and units will have to establish careful priorities to meet their program commitments within the funds available."

The board allocated $127,635,000 for the University's general fund, which funds almost all operations on campus. Over $12 million was allocated for the Cooperative Extension Service, with $8.8 million going to the Agricultural Experiment Station and $2.3 million to athletics.

Compiled by our national desk

Fighting comes closer to Saigon

South Vietnamese troops battled Communist forces 20 miles north of Saigon on Thursday in what the government military command said was the closest major fighting had come to the capital in more than two years.

Another battle was reported 25 miles farther north. A communique from the South Vietnamese command said government forces had repulsed both attacks. A command spokesman said Saigon was not threatened by the fighting.

The Saigon command said 15 government soldiers were killed and 52 wounded.

The command said North Vietnamese troops, supported by tanks, moved in behind an artillery barrage shortly before dawn and attacked positions near Phu Cuong, 20 miles north of the capital.

North Vietnamese forces over the past two months have captured a series of government outposts in the area in what America officials say appears to be a prelude to a Communist general offensive.

Syrian to meet Kissinger soon

Syrian Foreign Minister Abdel Halim Khaddam is expected to visit the nation's capital next week for talks with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger on an Israeli withdrawal from portions of the west bank of the Jordan River, sources said.

A call at the White House to see President Ford may be arranged, though officials said such plans have not been set yet.

The militant young minister's visit will probably be followed later by Saudi Arabian Foreign Minister Omar Saqqaf. That would complete a first round of exploratory talks by Kissinger on an Israeli withdrawal.

Airport bomb claimed for aliens

A man claiming to represent a group called Aliens of America Thursday took responsibility for the bombing last week at Los Angeles International Airport and threatened to use nerve gas to "destroy the entire personnel of Capitol Hill" in Washington, D.C.

A man identifying himself as Isak Rasim said in a tape recording found early Thursday that the nerve gas attack would be carried out to protest the treatment of aliens in the United States.

Rasim, who called himself chief military officer of Aliens of America, said the group would call off the nerve gas attack only if the U.S. Supreme Court ruled present immigration laws unconstitutional.

The airport bombing Aug. 6 killed three persons and injured 35 others.

Capitol chiefs see October finish

Senate and House Democratic leaders agreed Thursday to aim for adjournment of Congress between Oct. 1 and Oct. 15.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, after a meeting in his office with House Speaker Carl Albert, told newsmen that Labor Day recesses were still planned.

Mansfield, who Thursday broke the record for tenure as Senate majority leader with 13 years, 225 days, said he hoped it would be possible to pass a health insurance bill before adjournment.

Pet population publicity decried

Animal lovers are up in arms about public spaying operations on female dogs at the Wisconsin State Fair. But officials of the state Humane Society in Milwaukee who are supplying the female dogs for the free exhibitions refuse to investigate the complaints.

"We have women call and complain," said Arthur Guetzlow of the Humane Society, "but we're not going to do anything about it."

Hundreds of people are attending each of the four-times daily operations on the dogs at the state fair booth sponsored by the Wisconsin Veterinary Medical Assn.

The vets are performing the operations to publicize their efforts to control overpopulation in the United States of cats, dogs and other pets.

Cigaret, alcohol antidote found?

A combination of two vitamins and another common food substance could possibly protect humans against many of the harmful effects of smoking and heavy drinking, according to a team of Pennsylvania researchers.

They report that heavy drinkers and smokers might be able to use these "protective factors" to prevent heart disease and other side effects of smoking and drinking.

Vitamin C is one of the vitamins, along with thiamine, known as B1. The third substance is cysteine, a common compound found in most high-protein foods.

The work was done at the Coatesville, Pa., Veterans Administration Hospital.

State lottery numbers

The winning numbers in the regular weekly drawing of the Michigan Lottery Thursday are 066 and 354. Second chance numbers are 588 and 176. Winning numbers in the new "Fortune Maker" bonus drawing are 731 and 263.

GOP DRAFT REPORT DENIES HOUNDING

Nixon's own disclosures ousted him

WASHINGTON (AP) — A draft report by 10 House Judiciary Committee Republicans says there was no persuasive impeachment evidence against former President Nixon until his own disclosure last week.

Nixon admitted then that he obstructed justice in the Watergate cover-up, says the draft minority impeachment inquiry report. But it says "for the most part he was not guilty" of other impeachment charges voted against him.

"We hope that it will not hereafter be said by many that Richard Nixon was 'hounded out of office,' for that is not true," says the report which was under consideration Thursday by the GOP committee members.

In strong language, that some members said may be toned down in the final report, the draft adds that it was Nixon, "not seasoned Nixon-baiters," who impeded the initial FBI Watergate investigation and later tried to conceal that cover-up act.

But it says Nixon's own admission a week ago Monday of those two acts "is the first direct and persuasive evidence" that Nixon participated in the cover-up.

And in conflict with the majority report's conclusion that Nixon directed the Watergate cover-up from the beginning, the Republican report says the evidence is that Nixon joined "in an ongoing conspiracy to obstruct justice."

The some 100-page

minority report is to be published along with a 175-page majority report and individual views as the Judiciary Committee's official supporting document for the three impeachment articles it voted against Nixon late last month.

Committee members received galley proofs Wednesday night of the majority report concluding Nixon directed the cover-up from the start and also "repeatedly and willfully" abused his power by misusing federal agencies for political purposes.

The minority report was drafted for the 10 Republicans who voted against all three impeachment articles but announced after Nixon's disclosure last week they would vote for impeachment.

Impeachment proceedings have been halted, however, in the wake of Nixon's resignation.

His disclosure was that six days after the Watergate break

- in he approved a plan to steer the FBI away from investigating his re-election campaign money's financing it.

Until then, the Republicans' draft report contends, the committee's evidence for the Watergate cover-up impeachment articles was "comprised of layer upon layer of hearsay."

The Republicans' report also says committee evidence establishes that the $75,000 alleged hush money payment to E. Howard Hunt Jr. was not ordered by Nixon but was already in the process of being paid March 21, 1973, by the time Nixon made comments that could be interpreted as approving it.

It also says that whatever ambiguous comments Nixon made on clemency for Watergate defendants, there is no firm evidence "that the President ever offered or authorized the offer of clemency to any person in exchange for his silence or false testimony."

On the abuse of power impeachment article, the Republicans' report says the condemn Nixon's varying knowledge and involvement in such abuses by aides as misuse of the Internal Revenue Service.

But it contends there is no evidence directly implicating Nixon in illegal acts and says there is an open question, for example, whether Nixon ordered or condoned efforts by aides, including former White House counsel John Dean, to have the IRS audit political enemies.

Opposing the third impeachment article, Nixon's defiance of committee subpoenas, the draft report says this would "introduce an element of brittleness" in the constitution's checks and balances between the President and Congress.

"Furthermore," it says, "there may appear to be an element of unfairness of circularity in removing a President from office for failure to cooperate in his impeachment."

Cost of living unit nearly ready

WASHINGTON (AP) — Acting with unusual speed, both Senate and House moved closer Thursday toward creating the Cost of Living Task Force which President Ford requested to help fight inflation.

By voice vote, the Senate Banking Committee approved a bill creating the inflation-monitoring agency in much the same form requested by Ford, despite some expressions of skepticism.

The House Banking Committee earlier in the day voted 27-7 for virtually the same bill.

Both House and Senate are to take up the bill Monday and it should go to Ford early next week for his signature.

The proposal also picked up valuable support from organized labor and big business.

The Senate committee's approval came after the panel by a 10-5 vote rejected a substitute offered by Sen. Adlai Stevenson, D-Ill., who said the agency envisioned by Ford would have absolutely no authority to fight inflation.

Stevenson's amendment would have allowed the agency, to be known as the Council on Wage and Price Stability, to defer overly generous wage or price increases for up to 90 days, giving the President time to "jawbone" for moderation.

The proposal was voted down on grounds it would be the first step toward reimposing the wage-price controls which then-President Richard M. Nixon instituted on Aug. 15, 1971.

The bill would establish an agency of about 25 people to keep track of inflationary forces in the economy. It would have authority to gather data on wages and prices and also to hold public hearings on inflation problems.

It would not have any authority to control wages and prices, or to force price rollbacks.

Organized labor helped kill a similar proposal from the Nixon administration last spring, but Andrew Biemiller, chief lobbyist for the AFL-CIO, told the Senate Banking Committee Thursday labor now would give it a chance.

But he advised, "In the name of honesty and fair dealing with the American public, don't pretend this task force is an answer to the economic problems of America."

E. Douglas Kenna, president of the National Assn. of Manufacturers, also endorsed the task force, but, like Biemiller opposed any wage and price control authority.

The same skepticism was shared by many of those in Congress who voted for the bill. Ford told Congress Monday he wanted a bill approved in 10 days.

"Many of us have doubts about the effectiveness of this task force approach, but let's give the President's suggestion a try," Rep. Wright Patman, chairman of the House Banking Committee, said.

There were these other economic developments Thursday:

●President Ford held his second meeting in a week with his economic advisers to plan further moves to help control inflation, which he has said is the nation's most pressing problem.

●The nation's balance of payments was in deficit by $6.3 billion from April through June, the result of the four-fold increase in the price of world oil, the Commerce Dept. reported.

●The President vetoed a $47 million animal health research bill, saying it was inflationary. He was quoted by a member of the National Assn. of County Officials as saying he would also veto mass transit legislation on the same grounds if it called for $20 billion in spending.

●Ford's budget director, Roy L. Ash, told the Senate Budget Committee that a $5-billion budget cut could increase unemployment by about 250,000 jobs, while reducing inflation as much as three-tenths of one per cent. The nation's inflation rate has been above 11 per cent so far in 1974.

●Ash said President Ford planned to meet with leaders of Congress to discuss specific ways to cut federal spending. He said no date had been set for the meeting.

●The Federal Reserve Board reported that industrial output was virtually steady in July for the third month in a row. An increase in production of consumer goods was apparent, it said.

MSU graduate appointed as President's physician

WASHINGTON — Dr. William M. Lukash, an MSU graduate named Thursday as President Ford's personal physician, is delighted with the health and happiness of his new patient.

"He'll make my job easy," Lukash said a few hours after his selection was officially ratified at an Oval Office meeting with Ford on the seventh day of his presidency. Ford has "no medical problems whatsoever," said Lukash, and has "an informal, candid way about him" which contributes to his good health at age 61.

Lukash, 43, a Navy rear admiral who has been a White House physician since Lyndon Johnson's tenure.

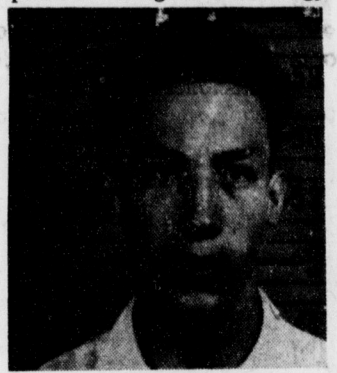

Lukash graduated from St. Francis Xavier High School in Ecorse, Mich., where his family lived until eight years ago when it moved to Lincoln Park.

He did his undergraduate work, majoring in chemical engineering, at MSU from 1948-52 and later graduated from the U-M medical school.

Now, as Chief White House physician and the first family's personal doctor, he succeeds

Dr. Walter Tkach, an Air Force major general now on duty in San Clemente, Calif., with former President Richard M. Nixon.

Lukash is a nationally noted specialist in gastroenterology and internal medicine. While at the White House, he has doubled as department chairman at the Navy's Bethesda Medical Center and has presented several widely acclaimed research papers at professional meetings.

"I'm blessed with a patient who has an understanding of the importance of physical fitness," said Lukash, referring to Ford's practice of swimming every day and his occasional games of golf.

The swimming not only helps keep the President physically fit but "helps him have a better sense of well-being," said Lukash.

Ford will lose his backyard swimming pool when he moves into the White House next week, but Lukash reported he is "interested in playing tennis again."

The new President underwent surgery in 1972 on a knee problem dating to his college football days. But Lukash said a daily program of leg strengthening exercises with weights has been successful.

Ford's last physical checkup was in January, and Lukash said he plans to give him "an interval checkup" soon, but added: "He's got no medical problems whatsoever."

"He has an informal, candid way about him which will give me free and easy access to him . . . and help avoid any potential problems," Lukash said. "He's gifted with the ability to relax when he's out of the office. This informal, relaxed atmosphere is so evident when he's with his family."

Alley renovation sparks quarrel over payment assessment plan

By LINDA SANDEL
State News Staff Writer

The much-delayed facelift of the alley behind area businesses in the 100-200 block of Grand River Avenue is finally underway, but several business managers say they don't intend to foot the bill for the operation.

Harold Lansing, manager of the Campus Music Shop, 217 E. Grand River Ave., says he will not pay what the city has determined to be his share of the cost and he insists that many other business managers in the block plan similar action.

Lansing is upset with methods used to finance the project which call for tenants to pay variable portions of a $45,000 price tag for landscaping and utility hookups. Landlords are being assessed $55,000 for electrical hook-ups but some tenants say that this cost will be passed on to them in the form of higher rents.

Each tenant will be assessed 49 cents per square unit of building space to meet the $45,000 cost. Lansing's share, therefore, is $926.10.

At its July 23 meeting, the East Lansing City Council voted unanimously to approve the installation and burying of electrical and telephone hook-ups in the alley.

This initial stage of construction had been delayed over two years by a continuous struggle between business and the city over financing the quarter-million dollar cost of the project. Lansing said that this controversy still remains unresolved in the minds of some business managers.

The controversy is over a plan to widen the alley from 15 to 22 feet, relandscape the entire area, paint the stores in visual designs, brick the sidewalk and install roofs at the alley entrances.

The proposed remodeling of the 100-200 block is similar in concept to the "alley," a modern walkway behind the 300 block stores between MAC Avenue and Charles Street. This "alley" was completed in 1971.

Council decided to finally approve the start of the 200 block renovation after Bill Boettcher, manager of Leibernann's, 209 E. Grand River Ave., told councilmembers that nearly 75 per cent of the block tenants and landlords have agreed to assume their shares of the beautification costs.

Council has already appropriated $120,000 for the project and the Board of Water and Light has agreed to finance $24,000 worth of hook-up costs, City Manager John Patriarche said.

Lansing, who would like to see the city assume total financial cost for the project, has accused Boettcher of falsifying his figures and claiming nonexistent support for the project.

He says that many businessmen favor the beautification project but not the methods used to finance it.

"The council keeps telling us that our business will benefit from a beautiful alley," Lansing said. "But I always have me back door locked and I'll keep it that way."

Boettcher, the self-styled leader of the movement to get the project completed, says Lansing is free to look at his list of written contracts from business managers who have agreed to finance a share of the costs involved.

"It's curious to me that Lansing would want to say no to this project when ecology is such a sensitive thing," Boettcher said. "These businesses have an obligation to the community to keep it up—they have made a good living here."

Boettcher, who spearheaded a drive to get business managers to approve the project's funding, explained why they resisted the original plan.

Originally each of the landlords was being assessed a flat rate for electricity and telephone service. Now each is being asked to pay only for the cost of installing the wires for their store or area, Boettcher said.

Boettcher noted that tenants in the area also objected to two other facets of the original plan.

First, several restaurant owners were upset that the alley area was to include several outdoor cafes which could have created competition for their businesses.

Second, many objected to the fact that general fund money was to be spent to improve several areas of rundown private property that exist in the alley.

Boettcher said the proposed restaurants have since been eliminated and that private property owners are being asked to pick up the tab for redevelopment of their property.

"The new plan is more financially and esthetically equitable than the old mess," said Charles Rose, owner of Beggar's Banquet, 218 Abbott Road, who was originally opposed to the project. "Now that it has been reworked, everybody's getting what they are paying for."

But other tenants disagree. Del Hawley, manager of Crossroads Imports said he too has misgivings about the necessity of the alley.

"I've always had mixed feelings about this," Hawley said. "I haven't made any legal commitment of money and I resent the fact that this is typically a city way of doing things—the people who are getting hurt have no say in what is going on."

Women's unit approved by county

By ANGELIA CARROLL
State News Staff Writer

A Women's Commission for Ingham County was approved Tuesday night by the county board of commissioners, but a proposed code of ethics did not fare as well.

The Women's Commission, which was opposed by three Republican commissioners, will serve as a clearinghouse for information about women's issues and activities. The commission will also sponsor workshops, prepare and distribute educational information and work with the county to insure that women's concerns are considered.

The 15 members of the commission will be appointed by the chairman of Ingham's board of commissioners.

The board agreed to provide stenographic help for the commission until it can provide an appropriation for the group. The county cannot provide such funding unless the state legislature passes a bill this fall allowing counties to fund women's commissions.

The proposed code of ethics, on which the board has been working for the past five months, was returned to the County Affairs and Policy Committee for further study after several attempts were made to amend the proposal. The title of the code was changed to the Code of Conduct and Ethics, and amendments were approved banning the introduction of resolutions or ordinances which violated state or federal laws and the use of foul or obscene language at any public meeting of the board.

Commissioner Bruce Potter, R-Lansing, objected strenuously to such piecemeal attempts to change the code, and moved that the entire matter be tabled.

"What I would like to suggest is that any commissioner who has objections contact the committee," Potter, a member of the committee, said. "We're ready to deal with any questions or objections brought before us."

Mary Schoemehl, D-Lansing, chairperson of the Policy committee, said after the meeting that she planned to bring the ethics code before the board again at its September meeting. Schoemehl said she did not expect any additional major changes to be made in the code, either by the committee or by the board.

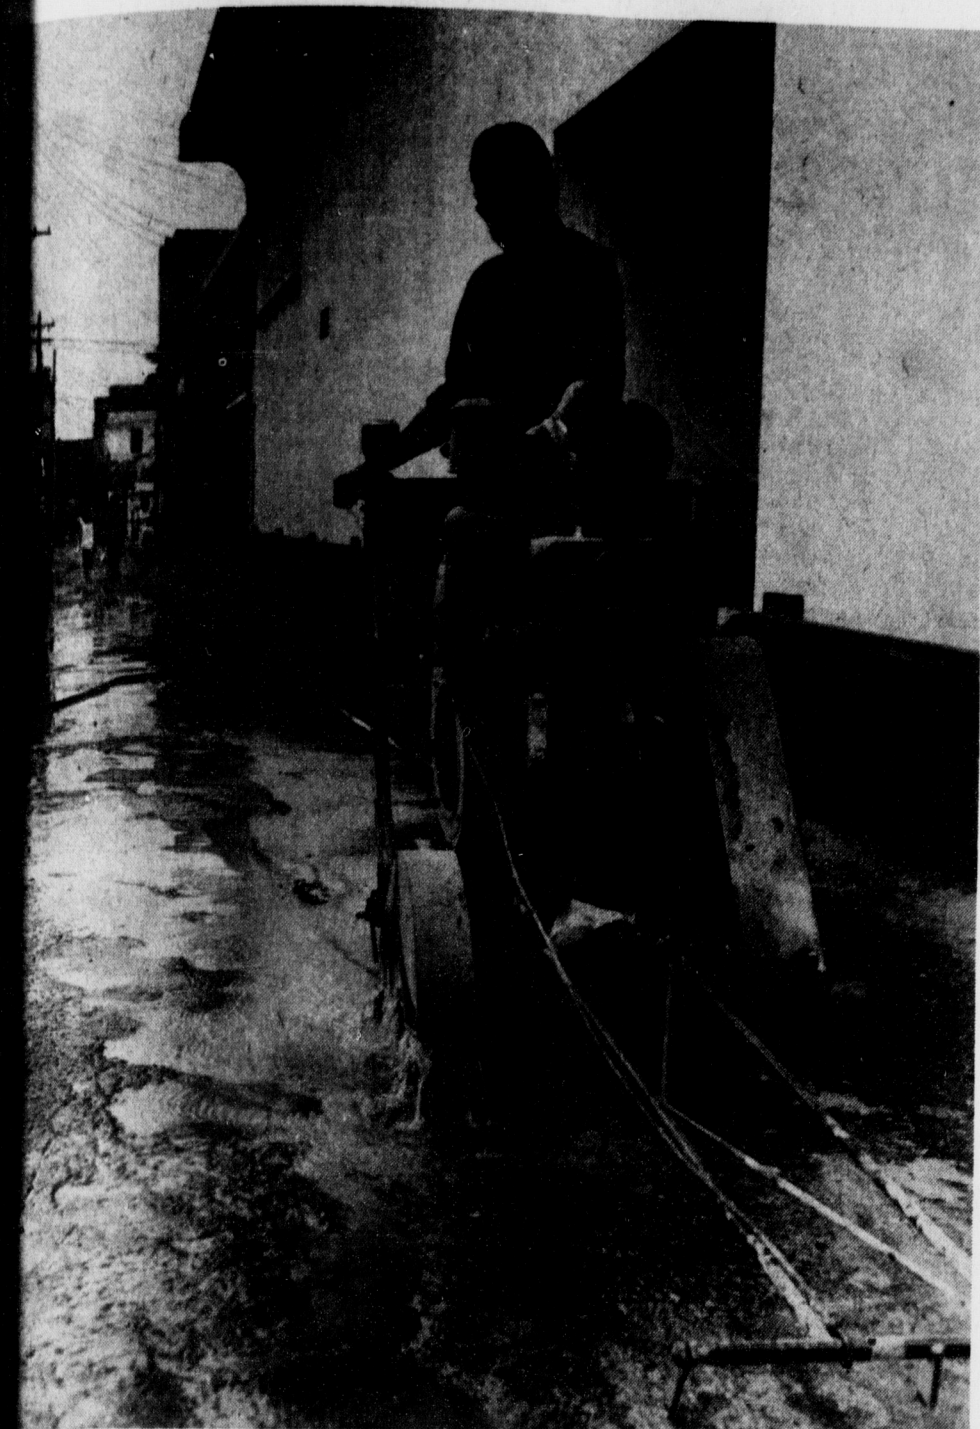

The board did approve, with only two dissenting votes, a resolution on open meetings which would allow closed committee sessions only for consideration of labor negotiations, employment matters which might be embarrassing to the employee involved, or for the acquisition, lease or sale of property.

Commissioners John Hayden, R-Williamston, and Derwood Boyd, R-East Lansing, opposed the measure, with Hayden calling it "redundant and unnecessary."

Several commissioners believed the measure would reinforce informal rules calling for open committee meetings, but Commissioner John Bos, R-Lansing, called it a "bunch of political hocus-pocus." "We have already been having open meetings," Bos said.

The commissioners also voted to give $9,000 to the Women's Division of the Open Door Corp., 1320 S. Washington Ave., Lansing for the operation of a rape counseling program. The money is part of the county's federal revenue sharing funds.

The Open Door Corp. will train rape counselors and staff the program, which will provide service 24 hours a day, seven days a week. The groups will also provide and develop educational materials on the problem of rape and attempt to gather accurate statistics on the actual incidence of rape in the county.

New VA head probable; Ford to get veterans bill

FROM WIRE SERVICES

WASHINGTON, — President Ford will nominate former Rep. Richard Roudebush as administrator of the troubled Veterans Administration, according to White House sources.

Other veterans-related activities, the 18-month logjam over veterans' education benefits was broken Tuesday as congressional leaders agreed to accept a compromise House bill to increase monthly benefits 23 per cent. Roudebush, an Indiana Republican who served with Ford in the House from 1961 to 1964, has been deputy administrator of the agency since January.

The Roudebush nomination may be announced next Monday when Ford addresses Veterans of Foreign Wars at their convention in Chicago.

Under the compromise veterans benefits bill, there would be a new $1,000-a-year federal program and veterans would be entitled to 36 months of education instead of 36.

The senators decided to try separately for a tuition allowance after they said the conferees "refused to move an inch" in stand against including it in the package. The House conferees expressed fears about abuses similar to that which occurred after World War II.

Chairman Vance Hartke, D-Ind., of the Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, said he expects both House and Senate to accept the measure quickly and get it on President Ford's desk next week in time for the new school year. He added, "I hope our new President will sign the GI bill as soon as it reaches his desk."

Under the bill a single veteran would get $270 a month compared to the present $220. A veteran with a wife would get $321 instead of $261. A veteran with a wife and one child would get $366 instead of $298. For each additional dependant over two the veteran would get $23 instead of $18.

The House originally passed a bill providing 13 per cent in monthly benefits and the Senate 18 per cent, compared with 8 per cent recommended by the Nixon administration over a year ago.

The House conferees offered a compromise by proposing the 23 per cent last Friday, accepted the extra months of education voted by the Senate and reduced the loan in the Senate bill from $2,000 to $1,000.

Car crash hits state

The boom has gone out of the automobile industry. The handwriting on the wall, which began to darken as gasoline prices skyrocketed during the Arab oil embargo last year, is now extending down onto the floor. Dropping car sales have brought a corresponding profit plummet, with layoffs and shortened work hours becoming a fact of life for thousands of Michigan auto workers.

Though American Motors Co., which captured a substantial wedge of the small car market last year, has experienced comparatively high profits of late, no auto manufacturer is likely to be sitting pretty when the industry has completed its adjustment to new market conditions.

Making the picture especially glum for state consumers are spiraling car prices, epitomized by General Motors' recently announced hike of an average $480 per vehicle for 1975 models. While Idaho residents can still buy potatoes, and Florida citizens can still drink orange juice, many Michiganders will be hard put to purchase their state's chief product at the new inflationary prices.

Since GM profits dipped to a 13-year low during the first six months of 1974, its sharp price hike is predictable. Price increases by the other auto makers also are approaching the 10 per cent mark. With the enormous costs of new automobiles, it is to be hoped that the car makers will put more emphasis on durability than on luxury and styling this year.

Planned obsolescence at $4,000 per car is a price few can afford. One cost-saving measure that might be advisable is running 15-second broadcast commercials explaining that the company is cutting prices by foregoing 45 seconds of the commercial.

Oil profit tax overdue

Congress must act quickly on legislation designed to tax away the oil industry's excess profits. Profits of many major oil companies were up over 100 per cent last year, and the oil price boom is continuing due to world market situations. U.S. oil companies should not benefit from the pricing practices of the Arab oil cartel at the expense of American citizens. After more than six months of debate, the time for taking this first step against excess oil profits has come.

In supporting the tax, Treasury Secretary William E. Simon — speaking for the Ford administration — emphasized that the measure would allow companies to escape the tax if they plowed their profits into exploration and production of more petroleum. Care must be taken to insure the profits are not used to extend the near-monopoly of the major oil companies into other top fuels, such as coal. Americans must not be at the mercy of increasingly multinational energy octopi extorting inflationary prices for fuel to supply basic needs such as heat and transportation.

Ruling aids consumer

You've been hassling with a finance company over payments on your new car. In the dead of the night one of the company's hit men hot-wires the car and you wake up with no wheels.

If a ruling made Monday by U.S. District Judge Noel P. Fox stands, finance companies may be barred from such activities. Fox declared that the state has a constitutional obligation to insure a court hearing for anyone having property which creditors are trying to repossess.

Hopefully, the ruling will provide the basis for extending this protection to all state consumers.

American businesses have long benefited from the slow workings of "due process" when faced with court battles. For instance, Reserve Mining Co. has dumped more than 100 million tons of hazardous pollutants into Lake Superior since three states went to court to halt the dumping. Private citizens also should have a little "due process" on their side.

JAMES RESTON

America needs singing veep

In his first few days in office, President Ford has touched off an explosion of common sense in Washington. He's not waiting for the Congress to cut the presidency down to size. He's lopping off the grandeur and keeping the dignity, and turning the old Nixon "enemies list" into a company of friends.

The man has the town laughing again. He wants a "good marriage" with the Congress, and not just a "honeymoon," he said. He pokes fun at his voting record, which incidentally, is not very funny. He has George Meany back at the White House and scolds GM for gouging the public, and talks about common courtesy and ordinary decency, as if they had gone out of style, which in a way they had.

Perhaps the most important thing so far, however, is that he is not confusing the government with the president, or babbling on about a generation of peace, but worrying about the price of hamburger and trying to get a good team on the field before the season starts.

His first test will be not only in his selection of a vice presidential nominee, but what he gives the man to do. Nobody needs to tell him about the importance of picking a man of presidential stature. In the last thirty years, four of the seven vice presidents have succeeded to the presidency, but these days the vice president is, or should be, more than a spare tire kept around in case of an accident.

The truth is that the modern presidency is too much for any one man. To be chief executive, head of government and head of state, principal spokesman, secular preacher, skipper of the speed and direction of the ship, among other things, will force him either to share responsibility or pass a law inventing the 48-hour day. This is especially true of a man like Ford who keeps his doors open and almost enjoys listening to gabby fools.

Also, there is nothing in the modern trend of picking presidents from Capitol Hill to prove that senators and congressmen make good administrators. They are accustomed to handling small staffs and talking a lot, and going for a beer or a game of golf when they feel like it. Kennedy and Johnson won no prizes for mastering the tangles of a vast bureaucracy, and even Nixon, who was supposed to be so efficient, could not even control his own burglars, or cover up their crimes. For precise and elevated language and leadership, read his transcripts!

A good case can be made, therefore, for making the vice president an assistant president, with far more responsibility than any vice president has had in the past. There is nothing in our system that forbids a division of responsibility. The vice president's work is what the president says it is. Ike had an assistant president in Sherman Adams, and turned Vice President Nixon into an unguided missile, whizzing around the country attacking the wicked Democrats. This relieved Ike of the dirty political work, but turned Nixon into a noisy and disruptive partisan — a role that destroyed him in the end.

The urgent war now for America is on the home front; the President recognized this by his emphasis on inflation and by the need for consultation and cooperation to deal with it, and he has the character and experience on the Hill to deal with it. A vice president, assisting the president in the White House, with knowledge of the world, and the executive experience and political savvy to see that the president's decisions are carried out by the departments and agencies — no mean job — could not only share his executive burdens but relieve him of the social burdens of giving and listening to elegant toasts with visiting dignitaries while his mind is on something more important.

It would be hard to overestimate the amount of energy, time and sleep that has been lost by presidents in the last generation in these ceremonial dinners, with reception lines and fiddlers on the stairs, and small talk at the table — and by the weary cabinet members struggling through it too. These dinners are symbols of imperial empires that are gone, but they are also for much of the time a form of involuntary servitude, which is forbidden by the 13th Amendment.

This may be the best argument for Nelson Rockefeller as vice president. He has always been a good, durable, steel-belted tire, accustomed to the pot-holes in New York City's roads, but he is also that rare thing: a good administrator with a knowledge of sewers and dreams, and just old enough — his age is finally an advantage — not to be a threat to the President or anybody else.

Besides, to President Nixon's everlasting credit, he brought Kissinger into the government on Nelson Rockefeller's recommendation, and the relationships between Ford and Kissinger go back a long way to the days when Ford attended Kissinger's seminars at Harvard.

So there is a chance now for Ford to decide: to field the best foreign policy and domestic policy team available, and at the same time bring the governorships and the states into his new administration. The President has stated the objectives: peace and strength at home and abroad; "communication, conciliation, compromise and cooperation."

Now he has to go from atmospherics to

Ford may roll on flat policy

Sentiment is nearly unanimous at this point that Jerry Ford is a nice, honest man with a ready smile and a greater than average amount of integrity.

When placed next to his predecessor, that makes him practically a saint.

But what may emerge as the central question of his administration is this: will President Ford's style be able to sustain support from nonconservatives through the long haul — the long haul referring of course to 6½ years of Jerry Ford?

There is every indication that Ford is considering a second four-year term and little reason to believe that the Democrats can field a candidate in '76 to beat someone who will surely be a popular incumbent.

So it's a safe bet that President Ford will be with us, as he strongly hinted in his Monday address, for a long time.

For the moment Ford is a relief. Even those of us who were diehard Nixon cynics — and could not view that man's self-serving vainglorious television addresses without laughing out loud or having the temptation to put a fist through the screen — were charmed by Ford's Monday address to Congress.

It was the first real glimpse of the man who took over at the end of our "long national nightmare," as Ford himself so aptly put it. He was straightforward, unpretentious, quick to smile and poke wry fun at himself. And he left all of us who watched him with the good feeling that at last our nation was represented by someone whose grace under pressure we could be proud of.

Ford's integrity and easy-going style fulfill a national yearning reminiscent of the desire for stability after World War II.

And just as the relatively calm years under Eisenhower were also years of stagnation in social areas, the possible darker side of the Ford presidency must also temper the support of anyone who is not a hard line conservative.

For Ford's views on defense spending, civil rights, environmental and other social issues promise us little change from Nixonian policies.

His hard line on maintaining large defense appropriations is especially dismaying when he urges at the same time a "balanced federal budget." That inevitably means sacrificing social and educational programs — which provide relatively more jobs per dollar spent — for a bloated defense budget, generally recognized as a leading cause of inflation.

And despite Ford's early meeting with the congressional Black Caucus — Nixon arranged only a perfunctory meeting with them a year after they first requested it — there is little reason to be optimistic about his performance in what has been the most neglected area of national attention since Lyndon Johnson left office: the struggle for justice for non-white Americans.

Civil rights measures have been on the back burner too long while politicians have let phony issues like busing obscure the underlying, festering problems of housing, education and jobs.

One can only hope that Black Caucus chairman Rep. Charles B. Rangel is right. Ford, he says, has been tied to his conservative Grand Rapids constituency and his past record on progressive legislation has reflected it.

"Now he's free from all those impediments . . . (and) has all the ingredients of a great President," Rangel said.

VIEWPOINT: CYPRUS

Turkish military action explained

By MSU TURKISH CLUB

We have read with dismay the recent resolution of the Greek Student Assn. of MSU (see Aug. 12 State News) containing totally unfounded allegations about Turks and the Turkish nation. There was no doubt in our minds that this highly emotional declaration had been drafted out of frustration rather than an objective analysis of the facts. This blatant attack on the Turkish nation once again confirms the recent remark by Bulent Ecevit, prime minister of Turkey, that "sometimes making peace is more difficult than making war." And as the events of Aug. 14 have clearly demonstrated, sometimes making war may be the only road to the establishment of a long-lasting peace.

After reviewing the Greek students' resolution, one cannot escape reaching the unfortunate conclusion that the tactics and ideals of Nikos Sampson are still alive and well and living in East Lansing, Michigan. The resolution clearly would have deserved a point-by-point response if the Greek students had not confused the facts with their own fears and dreams, and if the letter had contained an iota of understanding of the social, economic, political and military realities. Let us take a look at the facts.

Turkey is a peace-loving nation; she has not been at war in the last 50 years

(obviously there is no truth to the strange claim made by the Greek students that "Turkey was allied during World War II" with Nazi Germany); and has fought side by side with Americans and other United Nations forces in preserving peace in Korea.

Cyprus has never been ruled by Greece, but was a Turkish province for more than 300 years. The right to administer the island was rented to Great Britain in 1878 by the Ottoman Empire. The island became a part of the British Crown Colonies in 1925, following Turkey's losses in World War I. In 1960, a constitution, drawn by Turkey, Great Britain and Greece as guarantor nations, established the foundation of the Republic of Cyprus.

Since 1960, the Turkish Community in Cyprus has been living under constant pressure from the Greek Cypriots, exerted in the form of unilateral control of the island by the Greeks, restriction of the movements of the Turkish community and sealing them off from the coastal areas. In numerous instances, especially during the crises of 1963 and 1967, attempts have been made to usurp the legitimate rights of the Turkish community. The Greek Cypriots, led by Sampson and his followers, have brutally persecuted hundreds of defenseless Turkish villagers, including women and children.

The Turkish action to intervene in Cyprus on July 20, 1974, is fully justified under the London and Zurich Agreements. This action was clearly the only legitimate option left open to the Turkish government in light of the coup against the Republic of Cyprus. The coup was undertaken for the eventual union of the whole island with Greece and threatened the mere existence of the Turkish communities scattered around the island. The only goal of the Turkish action has been — and still is — to protect the basic rights of the Turkish people and to secure for them what they have lacked most under Greek rule over the past 14 years: autonomy, tranquility, freedom and a long-lasting peace.

In addition to denial of their human rights by the Greek Cypriots, the Turkish Cypriot community has paid heavy tolls over the years in terms of their lives and property. Furthermore, as of Aug. 14, there was no information about the fate of more than 50,000 Turks in villages in Cyprus whose lives were being seriously threatened by the Greeks and Greek Cypriots. The prices already paid by the defenseless Turkish Cypriots to gain their freedom far outweigh the losses suffered by the Greek community of Cyprus.

The recent series of talks in Geneva have clearly demonstrated that the Greeks still have not given up their enosis dream, cannot recognize the simple fact that Cyprus has never been — and will never become — a Greek island, and are not willing to accept the rights of the Turkish community to govern themselves autonomously. The most recent action taken by the Turkish armed forces was a last-resort measure to bring freedom to the Turkish people of Cyprus, who, if left to the discretion of the Greeks and Greek Cypriots, would have to go through, for years to come, the same kind of physical and psychological torture they have been going through during the past 14 years.

In light of these facts we now state the united stand of the Turkish community at MSU.

• The experience of the past 14 years has clearly demonstrated that peaceful coexistence of the two ethnic communities on Cyprus can only be achieved through a geographic separation of the Turkish and Greek populations of the island, coupled with autonomous administrations governing the two segments. We believe that no other resolution fully recognizes and guarantees the right to freedom, independence and security of the Turkish, as well as Greek, communities of the island.

• We warmly applaud the return of civilian rule in Greece and strongly support the continuation of the democratic regime. Despite our abhorrence of the stand taken by the Greek government on the issue of the rights of the Turkish community of Cyprus to autonomy and self-determination, we sincerely hope that the rebirth of democracy in Greece will mark the reopening of friendly relations between our two neighboring countries.

• We fully recognize the consequences for both countries, of a direct military confrontation between Greece and Turkey, and firmly believe that we should exercise extreme restraint to bring off this possibility. We are fully convinced that our country was forced, as a result of the plots engineered by the Greeks and Greek Cypriots, to have to resort to military intervention in order to defend the legitimate rights of the Turkish community on Cyprus. We pray and hope that the actions Turkey has taken for the establishment of long-lasting peace in Cyprus will not be misconstrued by Greece and the other nations of the world. Such a mistake may be costly for Greece and Turkey, as well as the rest of the civilized world.

From those individuals in the community who may want to pass judgment on this unfortunate crisis, we only ask that they review the facts and not unfounded and irresponsible allegations.

LETTERS

Car dealer has no support for strikers

To the Editor:

This letter is in reference to an Aug. 7 State News article entitled "Drive by WJIM Strikers Gets Results." I would like to set the record straight for your readers on several points which were contained within the article.

First of all, I did talk with a member of the local union by telephone on July 31, the day before the scheduled radio remote was to begin, at which time I was asked to cancel my radio remote and all advertising with WJIM so as "Not to show partiality to either side." I suggested that, in my opinion, this would definitely show our support for the union and against the radio station, which was not intended. I further stated that I was not familiar with either side's arguments and, frankly, have enough problems of my own attempting to sell cars in a depressed market without getting involved in a labor dispute of which I have no knowledge or concern.

I further explained that the lateness of this request would not allow me to find a substitute radio station and contract for a remote broadcast. In addition, I attempted to explain in detail the amount of careful planning that surrounded the radio remote with WJIM — which involved commitments and expenditures on support materials and other media promoting our sale that could not be cancelled.

It is true, as reported in the article, that this dealership did discontinue the use of the WJIM remote broadcast after it was picketed on Thursday. However, it was not as the result of strikers picketing the remote broadcast trailer, but the picketing of our dealership and the distributing of handbills to our customers stating in part, "Do Not Patronize! WHEELS TOYOTA support UNFAIR . . ."

Only after both I and our company attorney futilely asked the picketers and the president of the local union to consider picketing only the remote broadcast trailer, and not a business that was in no way involved with the issues or dispute between the radio station and the local union, was it suggested that the actions of the union representatives may well be viewed upon by a court of law as that of a secondary boycott.

Only after the union refused to stop picketing the dealership and stop approaching dealership customers was it mutually agreed between WJIM and this dealership that time did not permit an attempt to secure a temporary injunction against the union, and that the remainder of the remote should be cancelled.

It is true that this dealership did cancel the remainder of its remote advertising with WJIM, as this would further hindered the promotion of our and would have shown further support for the local union and sympathy to a cause, which was not intended.

J.H. Schaefer
President, Wheels Toyota

Happy days

To the Editor:

I'd like to comment on the many improvements that have taken place many levels. Nationally, President Ford's Monday night speech was impressive and down-to-earth president is a welcome change. In Michigan, I am relieved there is a new rape law that is in line with 1974, not 1874.

On campus, I am happy to see more paths and curb cuts. Now I may be able to escape with my life. If cars went 15 mph we'd be all set! In the residence halls, could get rid of all the cockroaches. Wilson Hall, I'd be comparatively happy. Address: 289 W. Wilson

RUSSELL BAKER

Grin and bare it

If my theory about American politics is correct, it may explain part of Nixon's unhappy fate.

The clue that leads me to this conclusion is buried in one of those asides to Haldeman Ehrlichman recorded in the White House tapes. In it, Nixon refers to some painful history he is undergoing and notes with dread that he has another dental appointment ahead that day.

Now there is nothing out of the ordinary in a man's having dental problems at the age 50, but it is an ill omen when that man is president.

People who have watched presidential politics in modern times will surely have noted that teeth have become the very essence of presidential character. American presidents, for whatever reason, seem to have vast acreage of sturdy enamel in their presidencies, much as airlines do in hardships.

As a general rule, you can judge a man's chances of becoming president by comparing the magnificence of his dental display with that of his competitors. The medys — half men and half teeth — says make formidable candidates. Indeed, Sen. Edward Kennedy's teeth, when displayed in the presidential manner, are superior to any other in the Democratic party that most democrats kit useless to run against him.

Moreover, the record shows that modern presidents without dazzling teeth invariably fail badly. Witness the decline of Harry Truman's following in the early 1950s and the destruction of Lyndon Johnson.

In comparison, Franklin Roosevelt, Dwight Eisenhower and John Kennedy had teeth that could stun a street crowd six blocks away and popularity polls to match.

This association between teeth and government skills does not seem to occur until the time of Theodore Roosevelt. A portrait of Washington, Jefferson or Lincoln in the modern presidential style — mouth agape from molar to molar with quantities of gum tissue exposed to forestall rumor of periodontal breakdown — would strike most of us as grotesque.

Perhaps our forefathers, more familiar with horses than we are, realized that looking a smart horse trader's offering the teeth doesn't tell you much more about what you are buying than, nowadays, we can learn from kicking a new car in the tires.

OP-ED PAGE

Sometime during the Franklin Roosevelt years, however, we outgrew horses and started buying cars after kicking the tires. Teeth have been the key to the presidency ever since. Just this summer Governor Bumpers of Arkansas was elected to replace J. W. Fulbright in the Senate, and none of the professional analyses failed to mention that he had truly splendid teeth and was regarded by Arkansans as a man who might some day win a place on a Democratic presidential ticket.

Not having been exposed to the impact of Bumper's dental clout, I am in no position to handicap him for the 1976 presidential teethstakes, but in moving up to the national stage he will need a powerful set of grinders to keep up with the competition.

Aside from the overpowering enamel supporting Senator Kennedy's claim to the White House, there is the truly staggering force of Nelson Rockefeller's ear-to-ear display them all, so awesome is his lip-retraction power.

Ronald Reagan, Elliot Richardson, Gerald Ford and Charles Percy all enter the competition with teeth that look capable of devouring a field of hog corn in less time than it takes to say "specificity." Richardson, however, shows a reluctance to display his molars, which could severely damage his chance of becoming president. American voters want to see the whole jawload before they surrender.

Senator Jackson's campaign might pick up if he would start getting his wisdom teeth in to view when the cameras arrive, but with his present modest display, which is scarcely enough to scare a baby out of the hiccups, he must be rated far behind Senator Kennedy.

Senator Mondale, who would also like people to mention him as a presidential candidate, seems a hopeless case. He has scarcely more lip retraction than Henry Kissinger, which means he can display nothing at all behind the bicusps, and though what we can see are very impressive indeed — as are Kissinger's — the country is not ready to elect a man who keeps more than half of his gums to himself.

What we desire, apparently, is a president who can uphold the glory of American dentistry while giving us the business.

Doggy graveyard soliloquy

When President Nixon resigned, I was so shaken up I didn't know what to do. So I went to the gravesite of Checkers, the Nixons' cocker spaniel, and sat on the stone.

"Well, Checkers," I said, "Your master has had it. You saved him once, but you couldn't save him this time... I know what you're saying, 'How could it happen?' How could a man who had the whole world in his hands blow it the way he did? I can't answer that."

"He did some great things, Checkers, even his worst enemies acknowledge that. He brought about a new relationship with China, and some sort of detente with Russia, and the whole world picture changed for the better under him."

"But at the same time he tore the fabric of his own country to shreds. First his people tried to steal an election, an election he was certain of winning without one bit of skulduggery. Then he tried to cover up the crimes of the people who worked for him — cheap, crummy crimes that a fifth-rate politician would consider beneath him."

"Why, Checkers, why?"

"That's the question we'll be asking for years to come. Why would a man with the power and the glory of the presidency become involved with dirty tricks, housebreaking, obstruction of justice and perjury? I'm not making this up, Checkers. It's all in the tapes... Oh, you don't know about the tapes? Well, you see soon after your master took over the presidency he decided to record the conversations of everyone he came in contact with — without their knowledge, except for H.R. Haldeman. You don't know Haldeman? He was Mr. Nixon's closest aide — he ran the White House with John Ehrlichman — they've both been indicted for the same crimes that finally caught up with your master."

"Anyway, the tapes were the only evidence that could convict Mr. Nixon, and he turned some over to the justice people and he was ordered to turn over other tapes by the courts. I know what you're going to ask, 'Why didn't he burn the tapes?' Nobody knows the answer to that question, Checkers. Either he was stupid or he was so contemptuous of the laws of this country he didn't believe anyone would ever get to hear them. Once he was ordered to turn over the tapes that implicated him his goose was cooked."

"But do you want to know the worst thing your master did? He lied to the American people. He lied to his friends, his lawyers, his own party and everyone who believed in him."

"Why, Checkers, why? You knew him better than we did. Why would a man think the American people would keep him in office after he deceived them time and time again?"

"Was it scorn for us that made him do it? Was it some insecurity in his character that kept him from playing by the rules? Or was it simply a case of a man who was a born loser even when he became President of the United States?"

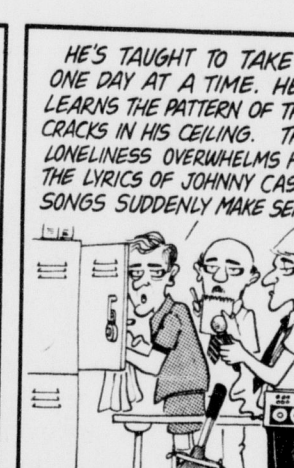

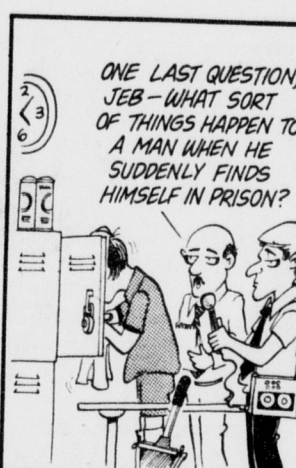

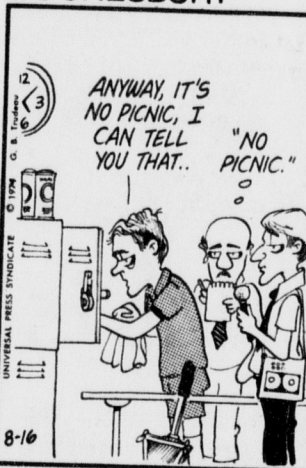

"Well, I've got to be going now. The country will survive, Checkers. We're much better than your master thinks we are. And we do have some consolation. If things hadn't worked out he way they did, Agnew might have become president and then we would have had to impeach him."

Allison Cheek, foreground, takes communion during a session of the House of Episcopal Bishops Wednesday. She was one of several women recently ordained into the priesthood. On Thursday the bishops declared the ordination invalid.

Church leaders declare women's priesthood void

CHICAGO (AP)—The ruling body of the Episcopal Church declared invalid Thursday the ordination of 11 women to the priesthood, then withdrew formal church charges against three bishops who ordained the women.

The impact on the women's ministry was not immediately determined. They voluntarily had refrained from ministerial duties at the request of their supporters until the ordination question was resolved.

The resolution by the House of Bishops declared the action of the three bishops, as well as a fourth, who publicly supported the ordinations, which took place on July 29 in Philadelphia.

One of the ordained women said she would fight the ruling. "I'm still a priest," said the Rev. Carter Heyward of New York.

"There's no question about it in my mind. The validity of our ordination is not up in the air, but what we do about it is."

She said the women will meet to determine their future action.

The resolution urged that the church's general convention reconsider the question of women's ordinations at its 1976 meeting but it rejected an amendment which would have approved women priests.

"... we express our conviction that the necessary conditions for valid ordination to the priesthood in the Episcopal Church were not fulfilled on the occasion in question," the resolution said.

The charges were brought by the Rt. Rev. Harold B. Robinson, diocesan bishop of western New York, who made the formal presentation to the Rt. Rev. John M. Allin, presiding bishop.

Under church rules, a board of inquiry leading to a eventual trial of a bishop must be impeached when at least three bishops present charges to the church's presiding officer.

In addition to Bishop Robinson, the Rt. Revs. George P. Reeves of Savannah, Ga., and James Stuart Wetmore of New York City, signed the charges. Bishop Robinson said he had the support of 20 other bishops.

On Wednesday, at the opening of the two-day emergency session of the House of Bishops, Bishop Robinson said he was confident he would gain the support of at least 50 of the 225 bishops representing the 3.2-million member church.

The charges accused the three bishops of breaking their vows and acting against the constitution and laws of the church.

Named are the Rt. Rev. Robert L. DeWitt, who resigned earlier from the Philadelphia diocese and now edits a church magazine; the Rt. Rev. Daniel Corrigan, retired bishop of Colorado and the Rt. Rev. Edward R. Welles, retired bishop of the West Missouri diocese.

Bishop Robinson did not name the Rt. Rev. Jose A. Ramos, of Costa Rica. Bishop Ramos attended the ordination ceremony and openly supported the action of the other three bishops, but did not participate in the ceremony.

Bishop Robinson formally presented the charges to the presiding bishop moments after the House of Bishops began debating resolutions including one which would declare the ordinations invalid.

State News Staff Writer

In a time when a president admits to considering a woman for vice president and one woman is already running for lieutenant governor, some political observers are expecting 1974 to be the year of the woman.

East Lansing's precinct delegate elections showed an interesting trend. Though most voters who do participate in the precinct delegate portion of the primary do not know the candidates, vote totals indicate that people do make some discriminations in their voting and do not just vote straight down the line. In almost every precinct where there were male and female candidates, the females tended to get far more votes than the males.

And, in the East Lansing district judge race, where Virginia Dean, the lone woman of the four candidates, was expected to poll a poor fourth, she was a strong third instead.

Women voters

"I was almost overappreciated," Dean said. "I definitely think the fact that I was the only woman was a contributing factor. After all, half of those voting are women."

Dean, who brought attention to the fact that only three out of 100 Michigan district court judges are women, said that while she had not been active in women's groups before the election she may begin now. She has already been contacted by several groups who want her to speak to them.

Human Rights party (HRP) candidate for lieutenant governor Reggie McNulty said that it is very important for women to become active in politics but that it is not a women's liberation habit when a woman votes for another woman simply because of her sex.

Sex-based vote

"The voters in 1974 will be too aware for anyone to get away with running a woman just on the fact that she is a woman," McNulty said.

NOT MERELY SEX-BASED VOTES

Women seek firm political role

"I wouldn't want a woman to vote for that, but rather because they have educated themselves to the HRP philosophies," she said.

Joe Finkbeiner, Ingham County Democratic party chairman, said that he thinks there has been a general trend developing over several years and that 1974 is no more the year of the woman than 1973.

"It's no different than any other movement in a way. Just like blacks began voting for blacks without necessarily checking their credentials, women must pass through that stage too. It's counter-productive, but it is changing rapidly," he said.

Husband vs. wife

Finkbeiner, who just squeaked by his wife in this year's precinct delegate race, was way behind her when they both ran in 1972. He said that many men were surprised to find themselves outpolled by their wives this year, though.

Alfreda Schmidt, chairwoman of the Ingham County Republican party, said though women are getting somewhat more interested in politics, it would be a misinterpretation to consider this year special for women candidates.

Catherine Lessard, the Republican candidate for the 59th state Representative seat currently held by H. Lynn Jondahl, said she believes the June election of state Rep. Colleen House, R - Bay City, indicates a trend.

Fresh faces

"In this year of Watergate and corruption women have a chance because they appear more honest. They are fresh faces who, for the most part, have not been visibly involved in politics," she said.

House said she believes some women may make a mistake if they feel they can win just because they are women.

"They have to examine their districts closely. In some districts, as in society in general, women have to work twice as hard just to be accepted as an equal," House said.

Another candidate for state representative, Democrat Denise Arnold from the 56th District, beat three men in the primary, to take her place on the November ballot.

Women's year?

"I'd love to see this be the year of the woman. But only a handful of women even made it through the primary, which doesn't indicate that this will be a women's year," Arnold said.

Betty Honey, Democratic candidate for the 5th District Ingham County commissioner seat, said that she will avoid identifying herself as a women's candidate since the sole woman sitting on the Williamston school board is being recalled.

"Women were wiped out in primaries all over the place and I don't want to remind people now that we're both women," Honey said.

Democratic County Commissioner Penny Stern, who is running for her second term, said that women are obviously getting more involved in politics but it is taking a long time.

"But when I go door to door now, people don't say, 'You we'll vote for you because you're a woman,' they say 'What have you done?' " Stern said.

MSU bus passes to cost dollar more per term

The costs of bus passes will be raised $1 fall

Paul Nilsson, director of Automatic Services, announced Wednesday that the cost of a regular pass for fall term will increase by $1 to $18. Winter term bus pass will be increased from $23 and the commuter lot bus pass will be increased from $10 to $11. The price of a single ride, which will remain the same.

"The increased costs of all the things we are compelled to buy have to be transmitted somehow to the rider," Nilsson said. "Everything has gone up. For example, there was a 6 per cent wage increase on July 1st."

Fuel costs have also soared, he said. Last July a gallon of diesel fuel cost 15 cents. Last month the price went to 33 cents and is still rising. Nilsson also noted that the costs of parts for buses has increased.

Wife of Korean president killed during attempt on husband's life

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Chung Hee Park's wife was killed Thursday when a gunman failed in an assassination attempt against her husband during a nationally televised address.

The gunman, seized on the spot, was later identified as Moon Se - kwang, a 23 - year - old Korean resident of Osaka, Japan.

Seoul Chief Prosecutor Kim Il - too said Moon fired four shots from a pistol he had stolen while in Osaka. He concealed the pistol inside a transistor radio when he entered Korea on Aug. 6, Kim said.

Kim said Moon entered Korea using a Japanese passport issued to Yukio Yoshii, a Japanese living in Osaka. He said Moon had apparently obtained the passport by giving false information.

Moon told investigators he had acted alone.

A 16 - year - old girl also was killed in the attempt, and the gunman was wounded in the thigh. Officials said the gunman's own bullets were responsible.

But witnesses said the gunman and the girl were hit by bullets fired by security guards.

The assassination attempt was expected to result in more repression in South Korea on the basis of an increased threat to national security, particularly if the gunman is found to be a Communist or a Communist sympathizer.

Park, head of an increasingly repressive regime, was giving an Independence Day speech when the gunman rose from a seat at the back of the National Theater and raced for the stage and began to fire a revolver in the direction of the stage.

The first shot hit the upper part of the bullet proof lectern. Park fell to the floor unhurt. A second shot hit Mrs. Park, 47, who was sitting behind the president on the stage.

Mrs. Park, bleeding heavily, fell from her seat. She was taken to nearby hospital for first aid and then transferred to a university hospital where she underwent nearly six hours of surgery.

South Korea immediately went into mourning. National police went on alert. Radio and television programs broadcast special programs in memory of Mrs. Park.

Koreans who had been living in Japan but were in Seoul to attend Independence Day ceremonies were refused permission to return to Japan — apparently in an effort to determine if there were a plot against the president among the Koreans living in Japan.

Tens of thousands of Koreans were watching the Park address on national television. A minute or so after the shooting, Park, visibly shaken, continued his address.

The audience of some 1,800, which had screamed in shock and terror during the attack, gave Park a standing ovation when Park left the stage waving his hand after the ceremony.

Park and his two daughters and one son were at the bedside when Mrs. Park died. Her body was removed to the presidential palace where she had lived since March 1962.

A former schoolteacher,

Mrs. Park participated actively in numerous social causes, including those of children and women. Mrs. Park, who was widely respected for her candidness, accompanied her husband on his campaigns and foreign trips.

The shooting was the first known direct attempt on Park's life since he came to power in a bloodless coup in May 1961. A North Korean commando group came within half a mile of the presidential palace with a mission to kill him in January 1968.

Opposition has recently grown as Park's rule has become more authoritarian. Park amended the constitution in 1972 to give him virtually unlimited powers and to pave the way for his indefinite rule.

Earlier this year, he issued a series of emergency decrees to crack down on antigovernment elements. Under the decrees, 171 persons have been convicted and 14 of them have been sentenced to death. Five later had their death sentences commuted to life terms.

Among the convicted are former President Yun Po - sun and Roman Catholic Bishop Daniel Tji.

A national funeral service was scheduled for Monday.

10 gallons start Canadian oil spills

LANSING (UPI) — Despite an outcry from Michigan officials and environmentalists, Canada went ahead Wednesday with plans to spill 500 gallons of crude oil into the St. Clair river as a test.

The first spill was scheduled to start Wednesday, before noon, depending on weather and water conditions.

"We think it sets a dangerous precedent," said Stewart Freeman, an assistant attorney general. "We did everything short of going to court to stop it."

The test has a reluctant cooperation of the state's Dept. of Natural Resources (DNR), which assigned an observer to watch as the first 10 gallons of oil was poured into the water on the Canadian side of the river that separates Canada and the United States north of Lake St. Clair.

The tests, scheduled to last about two weeks, were designed to test the capability of equipment to control and sweep up oil spilled into the river.

The tests were delayed twice before by opposition from Michigan officials and environmentalists, who said oil seum could damage wildlife and plantlife on the U.S. side of the river.

Clay township, near Algonac, passed a resolution recently demanding a halt to the spill testing. Some Canadian newspapers joined in opposition, but Canadian officials said it was important to learn how to prepare for accidental spills.

But Chief Donald Isaacs, who leads the Walpole Island Indian Council, said he did not oppose the tests. He said he hoped it would lead to a cleanup of accumulated oil seum around the island, which is located on the southern tip of the river. There are 1,500 island residents.

In the tests, Canadian officials will dump as much as 45 gallons of oil into the river at a time during the next two weeks. Then skimming boats and other equipment will clean it up.

Ralph W. Purdy, the DNR's deputy director for environmental protection said the Canadians have promised to halt or to alter the tests if Michigan or any other observers detect signs of environmental damage.

The state has reported 390 oil spills so far this year that it describes as serious. But these mostly are on - land spills, such as tanker truck accidents or pipeline breaks.

Question of Levin running mate still open

By MARY ANNE FLOOD
State News Staff Writer

The list of potential running mates for Democratic gubernatorial candidate Sander Levin continues to grow as the state Democratic convention approaches.

With early hopefuls either reluctant to leave present jobs or planning new political careers, the search for new names progresses.

One long shot for the position is MSU Trustee Pat Carrigan supported by fellow trustee Don Stevens. Levin has indicated to some of his supporters that he would be most interested in running with a woman.

The lieutenant governor candidate will be chosen at the state Democratic convention Aug. 23 - 24 in Grand Rapids. Levin's choice, which he is expected to reveal early next week, will most likely be the candidate.

"Everybody is speculating and, of course, I have heard a great deal about my possible involvement," Carrigan said. But she, along with other prospective running mates William Ralls of the Public Service Commission — whose name has long been mentioned for the position — and state Rep. William Fitzgerald of Detroit, has not heard from Levin.

But House Majority Floor Leader Bobby Crim, another lieutenant governor possibility, has talked to Levin about the campaign.

"He said he thought I'd be a good addition to the campaign. But I'd be hesitant to leave my legislative position because of the impact and input I currently have," Crim said.

Crim was an early entry in the Democratic gubernatorial primary race himself, but he withdrew because of a lack of financial and organizational support.

Crim said he has heard of several possible candidates, including Ralls; former state Rep. Ted Mrozowski of Hamtramck, who declined to be Levin's running mate in 1970; former House Majority Floor Leader Morris Stempien and Genesee County Sheriff John O'Brien, his area's highest vote getter. Genesee County's prosecutor Robert Leonard has also been mentioned by several political observers.

Thinking of a possible woman lieutenant governor candidate Crim mentioned state Democratic party Vice Chairperson Lillian Maynard, who is now working on the Levin campaign.

One Levin supporter discussing the possibilities of finding a willing, forceful woman to be Levin's second, said: "The Abzugs of Michigan are definitely keeping themselves hidden."

Levin has told supporters that his running mate need not be well-known figure, but that he would prefer a dynamic campaigner. For his 1970 running mate, when Levin ran against Gov. Milliken for the first time, Levin chose Livonia Mayor Edward McNamara. One Levin supporter said that McNamara not only lacked notoriety then, but Democrats did not even know his name after the campaign.

Workers at Levin's Detroit headquarters repeatedly have said the list of possibilities is growing rather than diminishing at this point and any cutting will not be done until Levin returns from his camping tour of the state.

Levin has his work cut out for him with Crim and others battling about leaving their positions. Sheriff O'Brien shares this hesitation and others like Rep. Fitzgerald have new political careers planned for November.

Levin may also have to consider geographical balance when he picks up running mate as some of the possibilities are also from the Detroit area.

"It is not as though people are waiting in line for this," a Democratic observer noted.

'Majestyk': a battering ram for a brain

By EDD RUDZATS
State News Staff Writer

In true machismo fashion, Charles Bronson in "Mr. Majestyk" slams, shoots, kicks and loves his way through a situation of his own creation.

What first appears to be a labor dispute between two melon farmers rapidly degenerates into a no-holds-barred confrontation between Majestyk and a Chicago hitman. Majestyk is totally responsible for an action that he precipitates and that is vented upon him.

In this film by director Richard Fleischer, it seems that aggressive behavior is the only means available to resolve a problem. When another melon farmer attempts to force Majestyk to hire different crew, Majestyk rams a shotgun in the man's groin and kicks him in the head.

Arrested on assault and battery charges, he finds himself in the middle of an escape attempt by a Chicago hit man. When it begins to backfire, Majestyk steps in, hoping to capture the hit man in exchange for his freedom in order to get the melon crop picked.

That exchange fails as the hitman overcomes Majestyk and vows to personally murder him. The rest of the film is a vivid battle between the hitman and the main character. The violence continually mounts until a final, grisly confrontation.

Yet "Mr. Majestyk" is thoroughly in keeping with the age-old tradition of the strong virile hero, with a gorgeous lady friend at his side, pursued by a fanatical villain. What "Mr. Majestyk" is exploring is the recurring theme of good versus evil — a staple in films no matter what the genre. "Mr. Majestyk" is really little more than a competently executed, tightly directed formula film, even if it does deal with good opposing the forces of evil.

The problem with the film, besides the pat formula, is the simple fact that Majestyk, as played by Bronson, is not such an admirable character after all. Though the script would like us to admire the man — he is a Vietnam veteran, a loner and a hard-working back-to-the-land individual — ultimately Majestyk is as obsessive as the villain who pursues him.

All Majestyk wants to do is get his melon crop harvested, yet he will resort to any means to achieve that end, including jumping through the rear window of a car and kidnapping a psychotic killer. The audience is asked to sympathize with the main character because the script seems to make him a victim of circumstance. This tight-lipped, super-cool man is hardly a victim of circumstance, he's an arrogant, self-centered man with a battering ram for a brain.

Thus "Mr. Majestyk" is tight-fisted action with violence galore, much more violence than appeared in this same formula in the forties.

The formula has worked for years and undoubtedly will go on working for countless more. One can only wish that explorations of this type of theme would increase in complexity and not remain in the pat, shallow category of one-dimensional he-man characters.

"Mr. Majestyk" is currently showing at the Meridian 4 Theaters.

Black playwright wants audience to get message

By JOE KIRBY

State News Staff Writer
Gerald Lemons is a tough act to follow.

Lemons, a 24-year-old black playwright, has directed 12 plays at MSU since 1970, 10 of them his own productions.

His play, "Confusing Crosswinds" will be presented at 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday in Wilson auditorium after a week-long rehearsal.

Lemons said this play involves a discussion between two women who favor women's liberation, two women who are for black liberation and one older woman who believes in liberation of the self.

The resolution of the argument is left to the imagination of the audience.

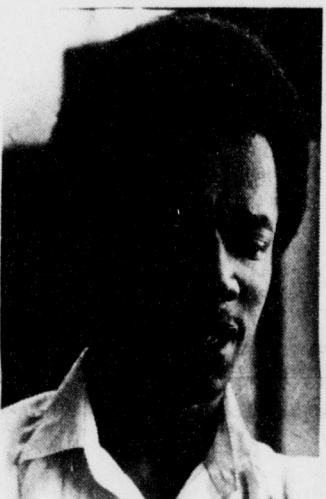

Lemons, a native of Detroit, became interested in the theater while a student at Northwestern High School. After coming to MSU in 1971, he decided to go beyond acting and present his own ideas to people.

"Instead of standing on a soapbox and telling people about them I decided to write them down," Lemons said.

Lemons said his plays deal with things he has seen and experiences he has had in his personal life, like breaking up with his fiancée.

"Loneliness makes someone delve into his mind to overcome loneliness," Lemons said.

Lemons has taken an active role in the Black Arts Company since it was formed in the fall of 1971. The first play he wrote and directed was "The Untogether Fall."

LEMONS

But his most successful play, and the one he is proudest of, is "The Natural Trial" which was performed at MSU in February. The play got good reviews here and in Chicago where he took it for a short tour.

"Everywhere it went we got standing ovations," Lemons said.

On Sept. 30, "The Natural Trial" will be performed at the Detroit Art Institute, and Lemons hopes to have Detroit Mayor Coleman Young in the audience on opening night.

Lemons won't be directing "The Natural Trial" in its Detroit engagement, and he is anxious "to see what another director does with my play."

The oldest of three children, Lemons was raised by his mother — a person who he said was too proud to accept ADC.

"I gained a great deal of pride from my mother," Lemons said. Last year, at a dinner sponsored by the Office of Black Affairs, Lemons received the African name, Anajukwelli Sanifu, which means sensitive and frank composer.

The name seems to fit Lemons, who is concerned that audiences get the messages in his plays and respect his skills.

"If at least one person gets my message, I've achieved my purpose," Lemons said. "I want to become a well-known playwright and a director with a message."

A lot of little kids are really "getting into" the artwork of an MSU professor.

Robert L. Weil, sculptor and associate professor of art, has created a sculpture for the Edgewood Village Day Care Center in Meridian Township, which was designed for children to play on.

"There's always some kid out there using it," said Lillie Williams, manager of the day care center.

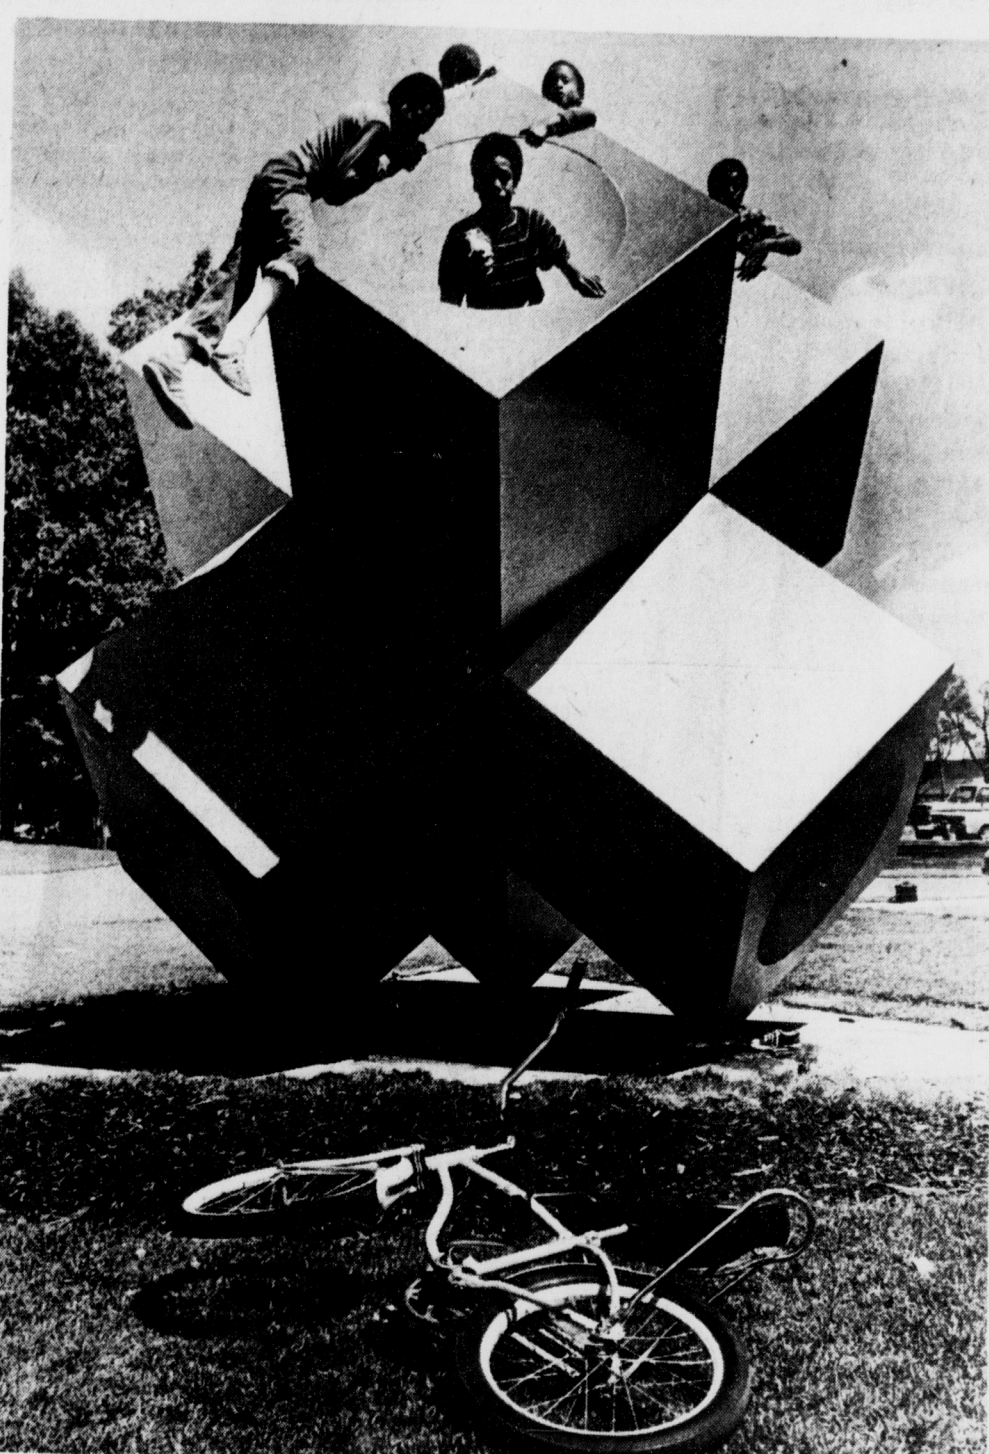

Weil believes that art is part of living and doesn't belong on a pedestal.

"I made it for the stretching the kids' big muscles," he said. "If you're going to climb inside and out, you need to use both your arms and legs and both hands and feet. That's where it's at."

The sculpture is formed of six four-foot cubes with the bottom three standing on points. It is constructed of quarter-inch steel plate and weighs a total of about 5,700 pounds.

"It's an elementary thing," Weil said. "So I painted it the primary colors - red, blue and yellow. Inside it's painted white."

Weil's major problem with the sculpture is that kids won't stay away from it long enough for the paint to dry thoroughly. Weil said he has painted it several times.

He seems to be the leader of the gang, as he looks boldly into the photographer's lens. But he and his buddies are just "stretching their big muscles" at Edgewood Village Day Care Center in Meridian Township.

House committee probing

"I'm sure Joe's going to serve out his term, even though he was murdered in the press and clobbered at the polls."

— James Starr, attorney for state Rep. John P. Smeeekens, R - Coldwater him recommended he be censured for travel expense fraud and conflict of interest. It is unlikely he will be expelled, even if he is reprimanded by the House.

"I'm sure Joe's going to serve out his term," Starr said. "Even though he was murdered in the press and clobbered at the polls."

Smeeekens could not be reached for comments.

Starr said Smeeekens did not receive a fair hearing by the committee because he was not permitted to see documents presented as evidence against him before the proceedings.

"The most significant question the House will consider is, when the press is out for blood, are you going to be able to have a fair hearing?" Starr said.

He said Smeeekens may appeal the committee's findings on the floor of the House and said the Coldwater Republican "could have some interesting things to say." He would not detail Smeeekens' possible revelations.

Neither Starr nor Smeeekens attended the last day of the committee's hearing because, Starr said, they were not made aware of the full range of charges against him.

Smeeekens finished fourth in a five-man race for the Republican nomination from the 41st Representative District.

For more than a month, his salary has been held in escrow by the clerk of the House. Smeeekens asked that he not be paid until the charges against him were resolved. He did not indicate, however, if he would give up his salary if found guilty.

Plowing championship goes to woman

ODELL, Ill. (AP) - "My brothers wouldn't plow and my father couldn't so I said I'd try," says 17-year-old Colleen Wolf, who won the Illinois state plowing championship.

The 5-foot - 4, 125-pound Colleen, second youngest of six children, said she'd driven a tractor on the family's 620-acre farm, but was never in control of a tractor and a plow until her father sat her on one last week.

"My dad asked me if I'd try," said Colleen, who had only three days' practice before she entered the Illinois state Plowing Assn.'s plow contest on Monday.

The contest took place on an area 300 feet by 100 feet. Judges awarded points for straightness of furrows, conformation, uniformity and depth.

Colleen earned 179 out of a possible 200 points, beating out last year's national champion and first runner-up, and won a berth in the national championships on Aug. 21 in Van Wert, Ohio.

Loren Heape, president of the plowing association, said he believed it was the first time a woman had won the contest in Illinois.

"It's really not that hard," said Colleen. "You have sighting poles and you just have to sit straight and keep your eye on them."

She gives credit for her victory to a "good teacher," her father Alvin, 49, a two-time national plowing champion. Her brother Gary, 22, won the national championship in 1969.

But her dad says he wasn't really surprised she won. "I thought she'd really take to it," he said. He said the secret of winning is "straightness and a good plow behind a good tractor."

"And there's a lot of luck," he added.

Colleen and her dad now are looking ahead to the national championships in Van Wert.

"We'll have to find her another tractor just like this one," her dad said. "We're working on that now."

County asks dog catcher to lend ear to bounty plan

MUNISING (UPI) - The dog catcher of Alger County agrees with a proposal that he cut off an ear from each dog he kills as proof he is entitled to a $3 bounty.

"It isn't such a bad idea at that," said Earl Rowley, who killed 53 dogs during June and July.

The matter came up when the Alger County board of commissioners questioned Rowley's bill for $488.

The bill covered keeping stray dogs for up to the required seven days at $2 a day and the $3 fee when they are killed.

For months, commissioners had questioned bills submitted by Rowley but no specific action was discussed until board chairman Merle St. Martin came up with the ear idea.

"We must have proof," agreed commissioner John Helsel of Munising, a city of 3,677 in the extreme north of the state's upper peninsula.

"We've got to keep these things straight," Helsel said a state law prohibits wardens from keeping dogs longer than seven days.

Before the idea goes before the whole board of commissioners, there are couple of things to work out.

Helsel said one problem was which ear to cut and where to keep it between commissioners' meetings.

The commission consists of nine members who govern the county.

The proposal was almost sure to stir a flame among animal lovers in Michigan and elsewhere. Most animal lovers were not even aware of the state law banning wardens from keeping stray dogs more than one week.

"The idea of cutting ears is one step away from uncivilized," said a member of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Detroit. "In fact, it is uncivilized."

Pont made director at Northwestern U.

EVANSTON, Ill. (UPI) - John Pont, head football coach at Northwestern University, Thursday was named athletic director at the Big Ten school to succeed William "Tippy" Dye.

Ingham County has 9 openings on committees

Committees of the Ingham County Board of Commissioners are looking for nine interested people.

Appointments to various committees will be made by board chairperson David Hollister at the board's Sept. 16 meeting in the county courthouse at Mason.

One position is open on each of the following committees: Veteran's Affairs, Airport Authority, Social Services, Health, Road Commission, Library, Ingham Medical Hospital, Fair Board and Coordinating Zoning Committee.

Persons interested in these positions should write to David Hollister, 1501 Vermont Ave, Lansing.

Pont will continue his coaching duties.

Pont, former Indiana University football coach and one-time gridiron pupil of coaching greats Ara Parseghian and Woody Hayes, became the 15th athletic director at Northwestern, the only privately endowed school in the Big Ten.

"John Pont is the kind of man we need at Northwestern to head our athletic program," President Robert H. Strotz said in announcing the appointment.

We won't waste a lot of space for superlatives on how great this system sounds because you really have to hear it.

It features the SANSUI 661 receiver for top FM performance and low distortion full range power. Lots of nice features too.

The accuracy and openness of EPICURE speakers is famous. Our choice for this system is the popular model 150.

We're also using a SANSUI receiver in this system because SANSUI has some really hot new models that offer better sound value. Like the 551 featured here. It provides plenty of clean power to fill a dorm room or apartment with window rattling sound.

Naturally we're using EPI speakers because, frankly, there isn't a better value in speakers available. EPI's model 90 delivers wide dispersed, smooth high frequencies plus honest gut stirring bass.

BSR's 310AXE record changer has surprisingly gentle record handling and excellent sound. With base, cover and cartridge, LIST $574.67
