

Ineligible students fight for trustee seats

By JOHN TINGWALL
State News Staff Writer

Winning is not everything. In fact, winning would mean nothing for two MSU student candidates for the MSU Board of Trustees.

The students, Bradley Sullivan and Patrice Gajewski, filed as candidates last spring. At that time, the Michigan Legislature was considering a bill that would have changed the language in the Michigan constitution and made students eligible for trusteeships at their own universities. Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley ruled in 1969 that such a service would constitute a conflict of interest.

The students remained ineligible when the Senate postponed action on the House-approved bill last week.

Since it is too late for the state elections division to alter the ballots, both names will appear in the November general election.

Gajewski, 22, 556 Hagadorn Road, senior, candidate for the Socialist Workers party, said she will conduct a full campaign regardless of her ineligibility.

"I bet there are a lot of students who don't even know it's illegal for an MSU student to run for a trustee seat," Gajewski, an East Lansing senior, said she would spend no money of her own and would limit her campaign to leaflets and party rallies.

The Human Rights party candidate, Bradley Sullivan, 409 E. Homes Hall, a Detroit junior, said that though his chances of victory are slim, he would go to court if he won to determine his eligibility.

"I'm sure a test case would be necessary, and I'd be willing to go through with it, because students deserve the right to be represented on the board," Sullivan said. "Who else knows more than we do about the problems at this University?"

Sullivan, 20, will not campaign for the office, but said the appearance of his name on the ballot would serve to establish the Human Rights party as a more recognizable political group.

Another Human Rights party candidate for MSU trustee, Therese DesCamp, dropped out of MSU last spring, thus making her eligible for the board seat.

"If I won and I did choose to return to MSU, and I met with opposition, I'd fight it in court to return," DesCamp said, "because I believe it's unconstitutional to prohibit students from representing themselves on their own governing boards."

DesCamp said she would begin campaigning on campus next week, attacking the board for violating the state housing code by tripling students in the dorm.

"The biggest issue in the campaign, though, will be the students' lack of power in governing themselves," DesCamp said.

DesCamp said the controversy over student access to Student Instructional Ratings Forms (SIRS) last spring proved students remain powerless at MSU.

One former candidate for the board of trustees, Larry Bartrem, said Atty. Gen. Kelley probably did not act on the ineligibility of the candidates because their chances of winning were minimal. Bartrem, defeated by incumbent Kenneth Thompson for the Republican nomination for the trusteeship, said Kelley would probably step in only if one of the ineligible candidates won.

"Kelley probably doesn't want to draw too much attention to his ruling that prohibits students from serving on the board because he's up for re-election and he needs the student vote," Bartrem said. "But if one of them won, I'm sure he's do something about it after the election."

Bartrem is one of two Michigan students named in a court suit against the attorney general last May by the Michigan Higher Education Student Assn. and the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), claiming his ruling is unconstitutional. An ACLU lawyer failed to appear at the Detroit district court in August on behalf of the student group, and the case is still pending.

At a press conference Tuesday, Gov. Milliken reiterated his support for students serving on their own governing boards.

"Students should have the opportunity to run and serve on these boards," Milliken told college newspaper editors.

Cain tells union meeting ASMSU may recall him

By ROSANNE LESS
State News Staff Writer

Somewhat fearful of the wrath of their employers, but still willing to take a crack at solidarity, nearly one hundred people attended the first meeting of Michigan State University Student Worker Union Local No. 1.

Many of those in attendance were especially concerned with learning what a student union really may be able to accomplish and what an employer might do to a union organizer.

Fitting to this theme — union organizer and ASMSU president Tim Cain announced to the group that the ASMSU board may attempt to impeach him for his union activities at tonight's ASMSU meeting.

Cain has been involved in student unionizing efforts since November 1962. Wednesday's meeting was the first campus wide effort of the union organizing committee to establish a collective bargaining agent for student employees.

Also speaking at the organizing session were two area labor organizers, Vicky Myberg, and C. Patric Larowe, MSU professor of economics.

Nyberg was active in the unionizing efforts of University secretaries last year. That unit is now legally recognized as the Clerical-Technical Workers.

"The worse paid employees on this campus are females and students," Nyberg said. "Even though the student role has changed in the last few years, it is still a submissive one. There is no reason to be submissive as an employee."

"Step by step this union will be won. One-half (of the student employees) is not here tonight because they do not care. The other half is not here because they are scared. You must not be a closet unionist."

Nyberg said that most students are from the managerial class of society, where unions have traditionally been regarded as evil and troublesome.

"There is nothing wrong with respectable wages for a respectable day's work," she said. "The next time we meet we must have more cards than we need signed."

Larowe, defeated in August 6th District Democratic Congressional race, explained the mechanics of union organization to the crowd that he described as "enormous, ... considering."

He said that if 7,000 students are employed on campus, then state union laws require a minimum of 30 per cent of the signatures of all possible employees on union authorization cards. Well over 600 cards were distributed at Wednesday's meeting.

Collecting these signatures "is no small task and will probably take you into winter term," Larowe said.

The next step after collecting signatures is petitioning the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) for certification to hold an election.

Larowe charged that the University gets away with as much as it can during negotiating sessions with other campus unions. He suggested that the proposed students' unions would have low dues, but could not explain how to stabilize residence hall room and board rates that may rise because of proposed union wage increases.

Cain, who asserted throughout the meeting that he was not acting as ASMSU president said: "The University has $200,000 worth of good lawyers so they might find some reason to challenge us (the union) in the courts."

The University has threatened that

Milliken OKs bill to reform campaigning

LANSING (UPI) — Gov. Milliken signed the state's campaign reform bill into law Wednesday, but the legislation will not take effect until April 1 of next year.

The legislation limiting campaign spending and requiring disclosure of contributions was enacted at a bill-signing ceremony attended by several re-election-bound lawmakers eager to identify with the bill.

The campaign bill requires disclosure of the names and addresses of all contributors, except those who give less than $10 at fundraising affairs and $15 to independent committees.

It limits spending by gubernatorial candidates to $2 million in the primary and general elections, Senate candidates to $50,000 and House candidates to $25,000.

Milliken called the bill "an important step toward election reform."

School benefit hike near for Vietnam vets

By AP and State News

WASHINGTON — House and Senate conferees agreed Wednesday on a compromise bill to increase school benefits for Vietnam Veterans by 23 per cent.

In addition, the bill would establish a loan program of $600 for each veteran and would extend from 36 to 45 months the time an undergraduate could receive benefits.

Don Svorn, coordinator for more than 2,000 MSU veterans, saw the step as a sign of progress.

At the least it would be an improvement," he said. "Ideally, more benefits would have been great."

The bill still must be approved by both the House and Senate and signed by President Ford before the increased benefits go into effect.

The total cost of the compromise bill would be $1.48 billion.

The conferees met for the first time Wednesday since a deadlock developed last month and a previous conference agreement was rejected by the House.

Rep. Olin Teague, D-Tex., who led the House conferees, predicted that President Ford would sign the bill, though Ford had warned he would veto the earlier conference report — with nearly identical provisions — as being inflationary.

Many veterans returned to school this fall without knowing how much their monthly support check would be.

A single veteran now getting $220 a month would receive $270 monthly under the compromise bill, retroactive to Sept. 1.

A veteran with a wife would have benefits increased from $261 to $321 a month. A veteran with a wife and child would get $366 instead of $298, and would also get $23 instead of $18 for each dependent over the age of two.

Dan Zimmerman, Veterans Administration representative at MSU, said that he felt personally such an increase in benefits "certainly would help."

"As the GI Bill is now, you can't live in any kind of style unless you're also working. It is tough enough just to make ends meet. It does not provide a free ride, and I don't think it was intended to," Zimmerman said.

According to committee sources, the Ford administration made a last minute proposal to increase benefits 20 per cent, knock out the loan program and drop the extension of benefits for undergraduates.

In addition, the administration wanted to delay the benefits increase until Jan. 1. In the original conference agreement, the per person loans established under the special fund would have been $1,000.

The original House bill passed earlier in the year was for $1.1 billion, and the Senate passed a $2,076 billion bill. The initial conference produced an agreement on $1.59 billion.

The administration had wanted no more than a $1.29 billion bill.

BULLETIN

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted overwhelmingly Wednesday night to trim another $145,000 from an expense money request for former President Richard M. Nixon that already had been slashed to $398,000.

But it rejected an initial effort to cut all $245,000 in transition funds.

The House approved 342 to 47 an amendment by Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, D-N.Y., to cut the $245,000 for cataloging Nixon's tapes and papers and answering more than 500,000 letters to $100,000.

Peter M. Flanigan, nominated to be ambassador to Spain, testifies before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in Washington Wednesday. Flanigan said there is no substance to allegations raised against him in connection with the International Telephone & Telegraph antitrust settlement.

Ex - Nixon aide denies contribution bargains

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former White House aide Peter M. Flanigan denied under oath Wednesday that he offered ambassadorships in exchange for contributions to former President Richard M. Nixon's campaigns.

Flanigan's testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, which is considering his nomination as ambassador to Spain, conflicted with that given House impeachment investigators by former Nixon lawyer Herbert Kalmbach.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, did not indicate an attempt to resolve the differences.

The charge of selling ambassadorships was one of several raised before the committee by Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo., who said Flanigan is unfit to hold such a high post because of his role in the ITT antitrust affair, the ambassadorships allegation and his reputation of being the White House go-between for businessmen seeking favors.

"Most of these matters have been looked into at great length by the Watergate special prosecutor ... and his response is that they know about these things and they have no charges against me," Flanigan said in response to Eagleton's allegations.

Flanigan, 54, specifically denied any unethical role in the ITT case, any attempt to sell ambassadorships and any allegation that he used his position as presidential adviser to financially enhance himself.

In testimony before the House Judiciary Committee earlier this year, Kalmbach said that in July or August 1971 Flanigan called and said, "Herb, we would like to have you contact a Dr. Ruth Farkas in New York. She is interested in giving $250,000 for Costa Rica ..."

"It was clear in my understanding of that conversation that she was interested in, that she would contribute $250,000 to the President's campaign and in return for that $250,000, she would be appointed ambassador to Costa Rica," Kalmbach said.

At a subsequent meeting, Kalmbach said Farkas was interested in a post in Europe and she asked, "Isn't $250,000 an awful lot of money for Costa Rica?"

"She didn't want to pay $250,000 for a little banana republic," Eagleton told the panel. "She wanted Europe and she got Europe."

Farkas later donated more than $300,000 to the 1972 Nixon campaign and was named ambassador to Luxembourg. She has said the donation and the appointment were unrelated.

Flanigan said Kalmbach's recollection of the events differed from his.

It actually was Kalmbach who initiated the first telephone call, Flanigan said, and the conversation involved Kalmbach's asking for the names of some well-to-do persons who could be approached for contributions.

At that time, Flanigan said, he cautioned Kalmbach that no commitments could be made to contributors. Kalmbach protested, and Flanigan was upheld by White House Chief of Staff H. R. Haldeman.

In the Justice Dept.'s antitrust case against ITT, Flanigan said his only role was to find a consultant, at the request of antitrust division chief Richard McLaren, to write a report on the consequences of blocking the ITT - Grinnell merger.

Slaughtering of calves averted

Cattlemen in Texas scrapped plans Wednesday to slaughter hundreds of calves to protest economic conditions after John White, state agriculture commissioner, said President Ford may possibly meet with them in Washington.

The cattlemen called off the slaughter after White spoke to them at the scene and warned them that their plan would create a bad public image.

"Thousands here in the United States can't afford to buy beef and milk. They're not going to understand what you're trying to do," White said, referring to the cattlemen's cost-price squeeze.

White issued his plea as an estimated 400 cattlemen and dairymen gathered on a ranch north of Stephenville, Tex., where they planned to shoot the calves and dump the carcasses in a mass grave.

Earlier Wednesday, a meatpacking official offered to slaughter and give to charity as many as 1,000 calves that the cattlemen planned to kill.

Michigan resister will serve

A second Michigan man has accepted the terms of President Ford's conditional amnesty program.

John S. Lyneis, 24, of Birmingham, chose Tuesday to take advantage of the amnesty offer rather than go on trial next week on draft evasion charges.

Lyneis was indicted on the charges in April 9, 1973, for failing to report for induction into the armed services.

U.S. attorney Ralph Guy said Lyneis would serve the full 24 months of alternative service in a community-oriented job.

FAA reports spilling of virus

The Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) disclosed Wednesday that a lethal shipment of virus-laden blood serum was spilled during an air shipment to Washington's National Airport.

FAA administrator Alexander Butterfield, who made the disclosure, did not say what the blood serum contained, but other FAA officials said the serum was loaded with infectious hepatitis that was being shipped from Managua, Nicaragua, to the Bethesda, Md., Naval Hospital.

It was the first time the FAA has disclosed the spillage, which occurred in January. It raised to three the number of known major incidents involving hazardous materials shipments at major airports or on passenger planes.

Union drops 4-day work week

The United Auto Workers (UAW) Union has dropped its experimental four-day work week at a Chrysler Corp. plant, ending the only four-day week in the auto industry.

The UAW said Tuesday its 120 workers at Chrysler's Tappan, N.Y., parts depot voted overwhelmingly to scrub the 60-day program.

The decision could signal the end of the four-day week as an issue in future bargaining between the union and the major automakers.

A union spokesman said workers were opposed to the job rotation required by the revised schedule and objected to other changes in work practices.

Greyhound Corp. pleads guilty

The Greyhound Corp. pleaded guilty Wednesday to a misdemeanor charge of making illegal contributions totaling $16,040 to the 1972 presidential campaigns of Richard M. Nixon and George McGovern.

U.S. District Judge Oliver Gasch deferred sentencing. The maximum possible fine is $5,000.

Simon notes possible conflict

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon acknowledged Wednesday that he was warned last spring that an oil company engineer's work with the Federal Energy Office (FEO) might involve conflict of interest.

Simon was head of the FEO, now the Federal Energy Administration, when Robert C. Bowen, a Phillips Petroleum engineer, was hired as a technical adviser.

He said that Bowen's supervisor assured him that his duties were "generally consistent" with guidelines designed to avoid the possibility of a conflict.

Simon testified as a House subcommittee opened a second round of hearings on possible conflicts of interest within the FEO and a Justice Dept. decision not to prosecute one case.

Chrysler recalls new models

Chrysler Corp. said Wednesday that its dealers are being notified of a potential accelerator pedal problem with some of 55,862 early produced cars for 1975 because of a bulge in the carpet or rubber mat.

Dealers were asked to correct the condition before delivering vehicles to customers or to ask customers to return their cars for correction. The company estimated only 2 per cent of the cars involved were affected by the carpet or mat problem.

The cars affected are Plymouth Valiants and Dodge Darts.

Greek government sets elections

The Greek government announced Wednesday it will hold a general election Nov. 17 and a referendum on the monarchy soon after. The announcement said a caretaker government, headed by Premier Constantine Caramanlis, will be formed "within the next few days" to conduct the elections, the first to be held in Greece since 1964.

An interim civilian "government of national salvation" has ruled Greece since July, when the military government collapsed because of the Cyprus crisis. Prior to that, Greece had been under military rule for seven years.

Ehrlichman seeks dismissal

WASHINGTON (AP) — District Judge John J. Sirica pressed his search for an impartial jury in the Watergate coverup trial Wednesday while one of the defendants, former White House aide, John D. Ehrlichman, claimed double jeopardy as grounds for dismissing him.

Ehrlichman said the White House plotters case, in which he already stands convicted, is so inextricably linked to the Watergate coverup that the separate accusations violate his constitutional rights.

He said in a memorandum that as soon as a jury is chosen he will petition the court to dismiss the Watergate charges of obstructing justice. The prosecution, meanwhile, disclosed that it has linked one more person to the alleged conspiracy.

Special prosecutor Leon Jaworski filed a statement that as a result of "newly discovered evidence" made known to the defendants on Monday, another person had been named an unindicted coconspirator.

The list of unindicted coconspirators has never officially been made public, except for acknowledgement that former President Richard

M. Nixon was one of those named.

Jaworski also filed a response on behalf of the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) to a subpoena filed by Ehrlichman demanding CIA documents.

The prosecutor said the agency would voluntarily provide some of the material subpoenaed, but asked that the subpoena be dismissed.

Without identifying the specific items subpoenaed, the response described the demand as "a blanket request for every piece of paper in the agency's files that mentions or in any way refers to" individuals linked to Watergate.

Jury selection on the second day of the coverup trial of former Nixon administration and campaign aides closely followed the pattern set on Tuesday.

Sirica hoped by the end of the day to have a large enough panel — about 150 persons — to move on to individual, private questioning to weed out those prejudiced by the massive publicity generated by the Watergate scandal.

After the first day, 65 persons were on the panel. Meanwhile, word was awaited from former President Nixon on whether he would obey subpoenas demanding his appearance as a defense witness for Ehrlichman and as a prosecution witness.

Herbert J. Miller, Nixon's Washington attorney, said last week he would submit material to the court by today. But Miller declined to say publicly whether his submission would be a motion asking dismissal of the subpoenas or a statement on the former President's health. Earlier this week, Dr. John C. Lungren, who has been treating Nixon for a recurrence of phlebitis, said it would be weeks before the former president would be well enough to travel.

Lungren said Wednesday no signs of hidden cancer have been detected in tests being conducted to determine the cause of Nixon's phlebitis.

In his daily written statement, Lungren said Nixon continued to respond well to treatment and he is still scheduled to go home.

The five defendants at the cover up trial, including three men who were among the closest to Nixon during his first term as president, are charged with conspiring to block the investigation of the June 1972 Watergate break-in.

In addition to Ehrlichman, they are former White House staff chief H. R. Haldeman, former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, former assistant Atty. Gen. Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth W. Parkinson, onetime attorney for Nixon's re-election committee.

Reinecke gets suspended penalty for ITT lie; quits post in California

FROM WIRE SERVICES

WASHINGTON — A half-hour after he resigned Wednesday as California's lieutenant governor, Ed Reinecke was given an 18-month suspended sentence for lying to a U.S. Senate committee about an ITT financial pledge to the 1972 Republican National Convention.

U.S. District Judge Barrington Parker also placed Reinecke under one month of unsupervised probation.

"You were a victim of your own selfish ambition," Parker told Reinecke. "But under the circumstances you have been penalized sufficiently."

Reinecke resigned as California's lieutenant governor at 12:15 p.m. EDT Wednesday in letters submitted to the state assembly speaker and the president of the California Senate.

The maximum penalty Parker could have imposed for the one count perjury conviction was five years in prison and a $2,000 fine.

Reinecke stood before Parker prior to the sentencing and delivered an emotional speech reiterating his claim of innocence. Reinecke has charged since his indictment April 3 that he was tricked by the special Watergate prosecutor into believing that he would not be charged.

"Perhaps cooperating with the law is not always the best thing to do," Reinecke said of what he called his full cooperation with the prosecutors, "and I regret making that statement."

"Obviously, I regret the statements that I made, but I made them in good faith. I still do not feel that I am guilty."

Parker rejected the charge that the special prosecutors had acted in bad faith, saying that the same issue had been discussed and rejected before the trial took place.

Parker said that Reinecke's 10 years as an elected official, in the U.S. Congress and in state office, "seems to me to impose more than a usual obligation on you. It imposes the highest obligation on you."

But he agreed with Reinecke's lawyer, F. Joseph Donahue, that Reinecke is now "a completely defeated man," and notes that Reinecke's was the only indictment to emerge from the ITT controversy.

Former Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst was allowed to plead guilty to a misdemeanor charge in the ITT case for basically the same act for which Reinecke was tried.

5 students in race for MSU board seats

By HARRIET WILKES

State News Staff Writer

Incumbent trustees Frank Merriman, R-DeKerville, and Kenneth Thompson, R-East Lansing, are competing in November with five students and seven other candidates for 2 eight-year appointments to the MSU Board of Trustees.

The two Democrats challenging the incumbents are John B. Bruff and Raymond B. Krolkowski. Bruff, 45, of Fraser, is a graduate of the University of Michigan Law School. He is a district representative for Rep. James G. O'Hara, D-Mich.

Krolkowski, 46, Birmingham, is a graduate of the University of Detroit. He has been the director of the American Polish Action Council, a member of the New Detroit Committee board of trustees and director of the Polish-American Chamber of Commerce.

Two Socialist Worker party candidates are challenging the incumbents. Patrice Gajewski, 22, 556 Hagadorn Road, senior, will graduate in March. A social science major, Gajewski belongs to the Young Socialist Alliance, a youth organization which supports the Socialist Workers Party.

Frank Brough, 20, of Detroit, attends Wayne State University. He has been a coordinator for the Lapeer County McGovern for President campaign and been elected twice to the Democratic state convention.

Two Human Rights party candidates are also in the race. Bradley K. Sullivan, 409 E. Holmes Hall, junior, worked in George McGovern's campaign in 1972. He is majoring in the social science multi-disciplinary program.

The second Human Rights party candidate, Therese Des Camp, 20, of 4357 Abbott Road, junior, is studying prenursing and theater. She has worked as a nurse's aid at Provincial House Nursing Home.

Two United Socialist Labor candidates, one of which is a student, are among the 14 competitors.

Ronald Anthony Antosch, 32, of Detroit, is an application engineer for the American Standard Industrial Products division in Dearborn. He is a former designer for the Buries Corporation and Ford Motor Engineering Center. Antosch received his associate degree in technical engineering from Wayne County Community College and is studying mechanical engineering at Wayne State University.

John W. Purcell Sr., 70, of Dearborn, operated a meatpacking business at Eastern Market in Detroit for 37 years. He has also owned and operated a brokerage firm.

Michigan Socialist Labor party candidate Edgar Thomas, 68, of Taylor, is a retired repairman for the Taylor school district.

United Socialist Labor candidate Susan Cook, 25, of Highland Park, is an MSU graduate. She helped organize the U.S. Labor party. She is also a press metal operator for Pontiac Motors.

The two incumbent Republican candidates, Merriman and Thompson, were elected eight years ago.

Merriman, 54, is a dairy farmer and is chairman of the board of trustees. Thompson, 66, received his Bachelor of Science degree in civil engineering from MSU in 1930. Before retiring two years ago, Thompson worked as Michigan Bell Telephone Company's general area manager of southern Michigan.

The State News will run a series of interviews with each candidate later this month.

Ford will explain pardon to subcommittee Oct. 10

FORM WIRE SERVICES

WASHINGTON — President Ford has agreed to appear before a House subcommittee a week from today to answer questions on his pardon of Richard M. Nixon, the subcommittee chairman, William Hungate, announced Wednesday.

Hungate, D-Mo., said the hearing will be open to live television coverage and will begin at 10 a.m. Ford's testimony would mark only the second time that an incumbent president had appeared in person before a panel of Congress.

The only precedent was an appearance by Abraham Lincoln in 1862 to explain to the House Judiciary Committee how the New York Herald was able to publish his State of the Union message before the speech had been delivered.

On Monday, the White House said that George Washington had testified about an abortive expedition against Indians, but research done last year by the Library of Congress shows that Washington only wrote a letter to an investigating committee.

2 gubernatorial candidates adopt taped phone messages for media

By MARY ANNE FLOOD

State News Staff Writer

In this Michigan election year, Dial-a-Prayer may have to compete with Dial-a-candidate.

Two gubernatorial candidates have established what is called an actuality line, a taped telephone message available to members of the media. The messages, which are periodically changed, feature the candidate speaking on various issues and are played for the press to retape, quote or talk back to.

Gov. Milliken has two actuality lines, one runs from his state-owned office which is used year round and one based at his campaign office.

There was recently some controversy surrounding the Milliken messages being transmitted over the state lines. The campaign of his Democratic opponent Sander Levin accused Milliken of using the state line for political campaign purposes, rather than his duties as governor.

The tapes, which played Wednesday on the two Milliken lines, were very different. The campaign line featured an aggressive Milliken coming down on Levin for his support of dropping the state food sales tax while the state line featured a soft-spoken Milliken thanking state legislators for their hard work on the campaign reform bill he recently signed.

Levin too has an actuality line, though his campaign mixes use of a passive dial-a-message policy with calling the radio stations themselves, playing the tape for interested newsmen.

Several of the seven third party candidates indicated an interest in such a device. But as Human Rights party candidate Zolton Ferency said, a third party candidate could not be assured that the media would make sufficient use of third party comments to make the phone line worth their while.

Though anyone with the price of a phone call can use an actuality line, most important messages will be played on radio stations and actuality lines are not equipped with multiline bookups to handle many calls.

Michigan Bell charges $42 per month for the phone line and taping device along with a $36.75 installation fee. Political parties can also expect to put a $50 deposit on the equipment since their credit is seldom considered adequate by the phone company.

President Ford's clemency program punishes 95 per cent of the Vietnam War resisters who will not step forward under such ridiculous conditions, Howard Jones said at the amnesty rally Wednesday.

Jones, Human Rights party candidate for the 6th Congressional District, said that 25,000 people at the most will be affected by Ford's program, which requires two years alternative service to the country, less than an honorable discharge and no veterans' benefits to the resisters.

"It offers no right of appeal for those who want to come forward," Jones said.

About 100 students gathered at Beaumont Tower where the Human Rights party and the East Lansing Peace Center jointly held the amnesty rally. The crowd shuffled against chilling winds and made room for the five students carrying signs which read "U.S. Money Pays for Tiger Cages" and "How long before Rocky pardons Ford?"

Jones said the war resisters had full rights under conditions set at the Nuremberg Trial to protest this war. They felt a greater duty to resist than to obey inhumane orders to slaughter.

"These war resisters have more to offer this country than emptying bedpans. They certainly have more to offer than Gerald Ford, Nelson Rockefeller, Scoop Jackson or George Wallace," he said.

Nelson Brown, peace education director of the Michigan Council of Churches, said that students will play an important role in promoting the amnesty movement and that the fight to end the war is not over until unconditional amnesty has been established.

Brown appeared on many radio and television programs after meeting with draft resisters in Toronto and Montreal.

On one program, Brown talked with a Vietnam war veteran who was seething with anger over the harsh amnesty conditions Ford has set.

"This man saw his buddy chopped up by liberation forces in Vietnam while his own rifle was jammed, but he did not blame those forces. He understood the responsibility lay with the people who put him there, with the set of economic and political forces which really control this country. He blamed them," Brown said.

Jones said it was ironic that Ford gave Nixon, the true villain of the war, a total amnesty, while he only gave the war resisters conditional amnesty.

"The people of this country deserve to know just how close we came to being a full-fledged police state under Richard M. Nixon," he said.

A boisterous cry of "Right on, right on" came from Zolton Ferency, who stayed for the end of Jones' speech and then disappeared from the rally. Jones said he had a 4 p.m. appointment.

Asked why the rally had such a low student turnout as compared with the May 1972 Grand River Avenue demonstrations, Jones said most students do not actively involve themselves unless the issue is as extreme as bombing. He said he felt most students supported the unconditional amnesty issue, though passively.

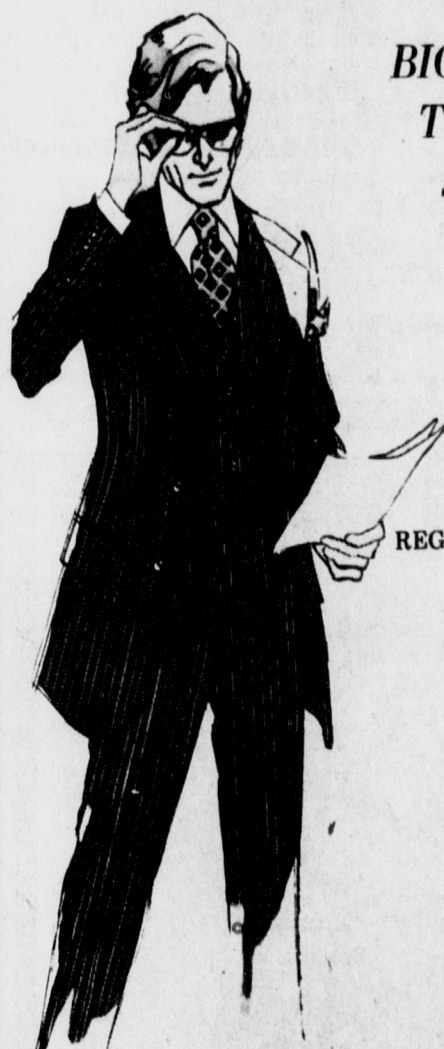

John Masterson, asst. professor of mathematics at MSU, addresses students by Beaumont Tower in support of complete amnesty for war resisters.

Ford's economic host short on consumers

The much-touted economic "summit" conference closed Saturday in a state of nonconsensus. More different points of view were expressed there than have reached the ears of a president in many years.

Unfortunately, Gerald Ford seems to be best tuned in to the wrong voices.

The President's announcement of two new groups of advisers to guide him in his fight against inflation should dismay citizens and consumers who see big business and big labor as contributors to the nation's plight, not as contributors to its salvation.

Indeed, Rhonda Karparkin, executive director of the Consumers Union of the United States, was almost denied the floor as she attacked the monopolies, government price supports and restrictions on competition that help to maintain artificially high prices in some industries.

While she and others complained of consumers underrepresentation at the summit, Ford insured a lack of consumers in the ongoing advisory process by appointing 16 representatives to a Labor-Management Committee, all from America's largest corporations and unions.

Ford expects to turn to the group for up-to-date advice on business policy. For his advice on the full economy, he established an Economic Policy Board, made up of cabinet officials and government economists, including such noted "advocates" of the little man as Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers; and Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz.

Where are the consumers, the only group with a vested interest in keeping costs and prices down?

Ford has not yet announced his policy proposals, so there is still hope that he may hear a neglected voice of the beleaguered consumers of America, not just the Big Voices of the ruling interests.

Oil users share fiscal woes

Last weekend, the foreign and finance ministers of the United States, Britain, West Germany, France and Japan met privately at Camp David to discuss the world economic crisis. This was the first indication that the major industrial nations have finally recognized that they must try to agree on common policies to deal with the common threat of worldwide inflation, soaring prices of oil and other raw materials, and the consequent danger of economic depression and financial, social and political anarchy.

This was a limited meeting with limited purposes, with some awkward handicaps. Canada, Italy, the Scandinavian countries and many others were left out, but it was at least a beginning by the big boys toward cooperation. France was in on the discussions this time along with Japan, so that the major industrial nations of America, Europe and Asia were finally talking together.

Earlier this year, they were dealing with this critical problem separately, and fussing with one another about how to analyze what everybody agreed was a world-wide crisis. France was suspicious of American "domination." Europe did not want to negotiate earlier this year with America and Japan at the same table, but in the last few months there has been a major change about procedures, if not about policy.

President Ford and Secretary of State Kissinger have been criticized in the last few days for over-dramatizing the problem and seeming to threaten the oil producing states with military action, if the latter did not roll back the prices that were disrupting the economies of the industrial and underdeveloped states alike.

"Sovereign nations," Ford said in Michigan the other day, "cannot allow their policies to be dictated, or their fate decided, by artificial rigging and distortion of world commodity prices."

"Throughout history," he added, "nations have gone to war over natural advantages such as water, food, or convenient passages on land or sea." And now, he insisted, "exorbitant" oil prices set by the oil producing nations and their cartel were threatening "the breakdown of world order and safety."

Kissinger was more subtle, but Ford's remarks were taken in the Arab world as a military threat, and this troubled the Japanese and the Europeans, for the threat did not seem to be credible. It violated the first rule of diplomacy, namely that nations should never threaten to do what they are not prepared to do, or suggest policies their allies could not afford to support.

Nevertheless, the Ford-Kissinger speeches did dramatize the dangers, and, what was largely forgotten, insisted that cooperation by the industrial nations with one another and with the oil-producing nations was imperative if the world was not to lurch into political, social, and financial chaos.

What the President and the secretary of state were saying, not too subtly, was that a continuation of soaring oil prices would shatter the world as we know it, that it would lead to unemployment and human misery all over the world, that democracy might not be able to survive inflation at the present rate, and might even lead to Communist or other authoritarian governments in many parts of what now remains of the free world.

The facts before the ministers at Camp David were not in dispute. These facts demonstrated the strain on the industrial nations by the rise in oil prices, and also the dramatic swing of monetary reserves to the producers of oil. Here are the basic facts and projections of the money flowing out of the industrial nations and into the oil producers as the result of the rising price of fuel.

YEAR	PAYMENTS BY UNITED STATES	OTHER MAJOR IMPORTERS
1972	$4.9 billion	$14.0 billion
1973	8.5	21.1
1974	25.2	74.8
1975	27.0	81.0
1976	30.3	90.7
1980	43.3	129.7
1985	64.0	192.0

The movement of revenues into the oil producing (OPEC) countries over this same period is estimated by the U.S. government and the world bank as follows:

YEAR	OIL REVENUES OF OPEC COUNTRIES	DOLLAR RESERVES OF OPEC COUNTRIES
1972	$18.9 billion	—
1973	29.6 billion	$26.0 billion
1974	100.0 billion	—
1975	108.0 billion	170.0 billion
1976	121.0 billion	—
1980	173.0 billion	653.0 billion
1985	256.0 billion	1,206.0 billion

On the basis of these staggering figures, the primary questions before the ministers at Camp David were how the oil consuming nations were going to meet these bills, and what the oil producing countries were going to do with this vast and growing accumulation of petrodollars.

The trend in the industrial world is toward more unemployment and social and political disruption. In the underdeveloped world, particularly in Africa and the Indian subcontinent, the trend is toward hunger, malnutrition and death. In the oil producing countries, the trend is toward riches almost beyond absorption and control. In the world at large, the trend is obviously toward revolutionary change.

No wonder, then, that Camp David was surrounded last weekend with unusual secrecy and security measures. The major nations have just begun to think together about the alarming consequences of the inflation. They are all diverted by domestic, economic and political crises, with weak governments (most of them facing elections), but at least they are now recognizing that they are faced by problems beyond their national control, and have to find international remedies for what is obviously a worldwide danger.

U.S. must use less oil

Public outcry can be expected against any 10 to 20 cents per gallon gasoline tax increase proposal and, to an extent, it will be justified.

Efforts must be taken to develop alternatives to gasoline usage, and tax breaks are in order to prevent the main burden from falling on the poor. Otherwise, the tax increase would be unfair and probably ineffective.

But, combined with a real Project Independence, President Ford should not reject the tax increase, perhaps spread out over several years, as a means of forcing the public to cut down on its unfortunately high consumption of gasoline.

The problem is this: The petroleum-exporting nations have quadrupled the price of oil in the last two years from $3 to $11.65 a barrel, causing prices to soar in almost all industries in the Western world.

Even more dangerous than the increased prices is the massive amount of capital suddenly thrust upon world markets by the newly rich Arab states. The World Bank estimates that in five years, the oil-exporting nations will have accumulated $650 billion from

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger predicts that the twin problems of high prices and Arab capital surplus will bring the world teetering to the brink of economic war, and bring down the structure of the world economy.

And the oil producing states indicated last week in Vienna that prices will keep rising.

Our only practical solution is to drastically curtail our petroleum consumption. Mass transit — held up by the Ford Administration, enforcement of speed limits, development of domestic oil sources and use of alternative energy will help. Any new gas tax will be painful to nearly everyone, and probably add to the cost of living over the short term. But direct action to decrease American dependency on foreign oil is vital for the nation's long term economic health.

This is the intent of the gas tax, and Ford should not discard the idea because of public outcry. Instead, he should encourage the full Project Independence and the tax relief for low income persons, which are also needed to make the gas tax more fair and effective.

Rocky spurns truth on Attica

Congress ought to explore thoroughly the qualifications and attitudes of any man who is to stand a heartbeat from the presidency. But last week before the Senate Judiciary Committee, the response of Nelson Rockefeller to a question about the Attica prison rebellion raised serious questions about his memory or his veracity or both; and the committee only let the matter drop.

Rockefeller did concede, tacitly but for the first time, that as governor of New York, he should not have permitted the armed attack on the prison on Sept. 13, 1971. That attack resulted in the deaths of 39 guards and inmates and the wounding of more than 80 other men. Two days later, Rockefeller said the attackers — the New York State Police — had done a "superb job."

To the Judiciary Committee, he said last week, "The procedure... namely to go ahead at the beginning without weapons and which was stopped in the process, which procedure has now been re-established by the state, is the best procedure and... if this would happen again I would think that was the proper way to proceed." It may comfort the families of 39 dead men that Rockefeller now believes it would have been better not to use firearms.

Rockefeller's other testimony on Attica largely obfuscated or distorted what happened there, including his own role. He said, for example, that Bobby Seale of the Black Panthers and William Kunstler, the attorney, "coincidentally arrived on the scene." Both men, in fact, were asked to come as "observers" by the rebellious inmates, as a part of their demands for a negotiated settlement, and the state agreed to their presence.

Again, Rockefeller told the Senators that "by about the third or fourth day" of the rebellion, his Commissioner of Corrections, Russell G. Oswald, was "fearful of his life" and would not go back into the prison. The fact is that Oswald did not return to the prison after the second day, not because he was "fearful of his life" — he had gone courageously into the prison yard three times — but because of a direct inmate threat to take him hostage.

At a crucial point in the negotiations, Rockefeller said of the observer group that the state had helped to assemble, "One by one they left... fearing their lives and the only man who was left who had the courage to stay and to argue with the prisoners was Mr. Clarence Jones of The Amsterdam News..."

Clarence Jones is a brave man who repeatedly proved it at Attica. But on the occasion to which the governor referred, at least half the observer group remained in the prison yard with him. The other half left only because they thought the entire group was leaving, and because a pledge had been exacted from them by Commissioner Oswald that all would leave together. The group who left included this writer. It included also Rep. Herman Badillo of New York, one of the most courageous and effective of the observers, who also had involved himself personally in jail uprisings in New York City the year before. It included Kunstler, too. But when he heard that the Jones group had remained in the prison yard, he immediately returned there and made a bold speech that Oswald later praised and which many of the other observers, including Clarence Jones, thought might have saved them from being taken hostage.

Nelson Rockefeller was at that time and throughout the rebellion and the state police attack, nowhere near the Attica prison yard. When members of the observer committee asked him to come, he told the Judiciary Committee, "I think... that they had failed and that therefore, rather than to have to say we have failed in this maybe if somebody else would come, maybe something would happen..."

This is a false and gratuitous slur on the observers' motives. Jones, Badillo, state Sen. John Dunne of New York, and this writer all told Rockefeller by telephone that if he would come to Attica to talk with the observers, not the inmates, time might be gained in which a negotiated settlement might be arranged, and the governor's good faith in seeking such a settlement would be demonstrated to the inmates.

Before the Senate committee, Rockefeller attributed to himself a proposal that he come to Attica after the inmates had given up their hostages. In fact, Oswald made that proposal to Rockefeller, who turned it down. Rockefeller also said the deaths of 10 guards from state police gunfire were due mainly to "overfire" from troopers trying to protect another from inmate attack. The New York State Commission on Attica raised serious doubts about this explanation two years ago; and it is simply not true, as Rockefeller claimed, that "the instructions of the state police were not to use their weapons unless one of their own had to be defended."

The irrefutable truth is that for six solid minutes — that bloody morning, New York State Police poured indiscriminate buckshot and rifle fire into a milling mass of gas-blinded inmates.

To the Editor:

To think the University spent thousands of dollars on a fancy new visually attractive ice arena, but spent only minimal amounts on safety for the thousands of fans. That plexiglass installed is very minimal protection!

Two fans were injured on opening night. No injuries would have occurred if an inexpensive net or some other protective covering had been planned. The ice arena was just built. There is no excuse for unsafe conditions. How many people were injured in the old arena? How many more fans will be injured before the athletic department or University administration does something?

Family budget summit flops

We all gathered in the living room for what was the first Family Economic Summit in our history.

I opened the meeting with a brief statement.

"I have called you all together to discuss the grave economic situation that this family faces. As you know, inflation has spiraled the cost of all consumer goods and we could be heading for a serious domestic depression. I would like your advice as to how we can set our house in order."

My son Joel said: "I think your tight-money policies of the past year have contributed greatly to the crisis. It seems to me that if you loosened up on our allowances, it would give us more money to spend and take us out of our doldrums."

"I am not certain that is the solution," I replied. "One of the causes of the family economic woes is that we are spending more money than we're taking in. It was my hope that we could balance the budget before the year is out. Any increases in allowances at this time would only encourage inflation."

My daughter Jennifer said: "The biggest item in the family seems to be education. Why don't we all quit school and take a year off to find ourselves?"

"This is not a practical solution. If you took a year off from school, I would have to subsidize you, which would cost more than your tuition. I hardly see a saving there. I don't believe a high unemployment rate in the family would solve anything."

I continued, "It seems to me one of the major causes of the problem is the high cost of gasoline. If everyone turned in his and her gas credit card and paid cash for fuel, I could see a light at the end of the tunnel."

My daughter Connie said angrily: "A good transportation system in this family is essential to a healthy economy. Making us turn in our credit cards is an extreme measure which should be used only when everything else fails."

"All right then, let us take up the subject of rock concerts. Last year members of this group spent a total of $250 on rock concerts and $330 on rock records and tapes. This is certainly an area where costs can be cut substantially."

Jennifer rose in a fury "You are penalizing the poor and the neediest in this family by taking away from them their major form of entertainment. Why don't you cut some of the fat from Mom's household budget?"

"I was coming to that," I said. "It seems to me that too much money has been spent on slipcovers, drapes and nonessential items such as lamps and rugs. I would suggest a $500 ceiling on all household expenditures."

"That's out of the question," my wife said. "Applying a meat ax to those few, fixed cost of living items would only postpone what it would cost us to fix up the house at a later date. We are actually saving money by spending it now."

"I was afraid that would be your response. Well, what about food? Surely it would be no problem to cut there?"

"I would go along with that," my wife said, "with one stipulation. From now on you will do all the supermarket shopping for the family, which I'm sure you'd enjoy."

"Okay, let's forget about saving money on food," I said. "But surely in this family budget there is some place we can cut waste."

Americans need a chance to vote for Someone Else

After Edward Kennedy withdrew from the call of destiny the other day, the political reporters put in a hard day's work and came up with a small list of men the Democratic party might send to the White House in his stead. A sad list it was. Not because the men on it lacked merit — some of them did not — but because it was so small, and so predictable.

There was Governor Wallace, of course, messiah to disgruntled American yeomanry and the burnt-cross set alike. The more ambitious senators of liberal, middle-of-the-road and conservative persuasion, a congressman or two, the usual scattering of governors little known across their state lines but said to be, as they always are, young and attractive.

Not a woman, not a black, not a Jew, not a pauper, not an industrialist, not a banker, not a labor leader or working stiff, not a doctor or lawyer or manager or administrator or artist. Nobody but practicing politicians, and very few of them.

The reporters do not invent these lists. They get them from Democratic politicians who know what kind of people can be nominated by a Democratic convention. Same for Republicans, whose list right now would be even smaller than the Democrats.

There is very little substance to the popular notion that the president is chosen by the people. The people's role is limited to picking between two possible presidents chosen by the parties. This between Nixon and Humphrey was typical of the frequently bizarre workings of this two-party system. Imagine going to a well-stocked supermarket to buy victuals for Sunday dinner and being told you may buy only ginger snaps or popples.

There is no clear way out of the two-party trap, but there is a way to place restraints on the unsatisfactory presidents that result from it. It requires only a small ballot reform. At election time the ballot should have a third line on which people could vote for somebody else.

Not anybody else in particular. Not a write-in. The candidate would be somebody else. In 1972, for example, this system would have enabled the voter to healthy restraints on his instincts toward grandiosity.

The present system encourages such pretensions without foundation. President Nixon, despite the talk of his great 1972 landslide which was said to have given him a "mandate," was in fact a minority president, misled by the deceptive two-party ballot into believing he was a vast popular choice.

The simplest arithmetic shows how this can come about. Here are the figures: the number of Americans old enough to vote was about 140 million. Of these only 55 per cent — or 77 million persons — went to the polls. Of this 55 per cent turnout, Nixon won 61 per cent, or 47 million chase among Nixon, McGovern and Somebody Else.

Being confronted in 1968 with a choice between Nixon and Humphrey was like going to a supermarket and being told you may buy only ginger snaps or popples.

Is there any doubt that millions of voters who might otherwise stay home would gladly brave sleet and lightning to cast a vote for Somebody Else in the typical presidential election? It is a certainty.

And what of other millions who trudge leadenly to the polls to cast a reluctant vote for the lesser evil because they believe good citizenship requires them to vote whether there is anybody they want to vote for or not? A chance to vote for Somebody Else would satisfy their sense of civic obligation without requiring them to connive in electing a man they believe to be unworthy.

It is conceivable, though not likely, that Somebody Else might beat both party candidates. No problem arises. The party candidate who finished next in the polling would still become president, but he would be on notice that the country prefers Somebody Else, which would place votes. The Nixon "landslide," then, was created by 47 million out of a possible 140 million voters, or 34 per cent of the adult population. A man who has only 34 per cent of the vote is deluding himself if he does not suspect the country really yearns for Somebody Else.

If Somebody Else runs strongly in three or four elections, the two parties might even change their ways, quit nominating men whose chief qualifications are enough money to run a two-year campaign for the party's favor and skill at manipulating the party's machinery, and make an effort to offer us Somebody Else.

It is not likely, of course. Indeed, it is far likelier that they would use their genius to drive Somebody Else off the ballot, perhaps on the grounds that Somebody Else is not a native-born American citizen.

Ford and Jackson, everybody?

VIEWPOINT: PROBLEM SOLVING

Ideas offered for U.S. survival

By FRANK BLAIR

I firmly believe that our nation of peoples will self-destruct under existing policies. However, I also understand that our country has within its governmental machinery an ability to reform without revolution. Therefore, I am asking that you do your part in bringing about the following reforms to save our people and our nation:

- Reduce inflation by sacrificing our "economies of scale" (dismantling our monopolies, both labor and business) for increased price competition that results in lower prices.
- Reduce energy scarcities through federal research investment toward immediate solar energy utilization to reduce dependency upon oil, gas and coal.
- Increase federal revenues (and reduce law enforcement expenditures) through luxury taxation of: legalized gambling, prostitution, pornography, marijuana, cigarettes, alcohol, etc.
- Guarantee minimum welfare for all through federally financed national health coverage, federally financed education through college and trade school, federal taxation and subsidy of personal income through one agency (a consolidation of tax, welfare, social security, Medicaid, etc.) founded on the following principles: all are taxed the same percentage of their income above a minimum standard of living; all are subsidized that need to meet a minimum standard of living; and, that the minimum standard of living be variable to a cost of living index.

- Return the power to initiate war from the president to the legislature.
- Admission of wrong for U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War.
- Redefine presidential clemency to eliminate pre-judicial action.
- Political reforms to include: elimination of the electoral college, total federal financing of federal elections, full disclosure of candidates' finances and campaign expenditures, televised federal legislation and a separate government agency to investigate (and prosecute) alleged wrongdoing by federal officials, and

- Increased public health care, along with reduced medical expenses by widespread education to encourage voluntary prevention of unhealthy

Israelis meet to deal with terror

TEL AVIV (AP) — The Israeli cabinet met in an extraordinary session Wednesday to deal with a wave of Palestinian - Israeli terror and reprisal that threatens chances for Mideast peace.

Guerilla warfare between Israel and Palestine has recently flared into a deadly round of raids and revenge that has turned Israel into a fortress and south Lebanon into a partial wasteland.

In a further sharpening of tensions, Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin warned in a talk with students that Israel would attack Arab population centers if the Arab states fired missiles at Israeli towns.

Rabin's warning followed a speech Tuesday by Syrian Defense Minister Maj. Gen. Mustafa Tlas declaring that Syria possessed weapons could hit any target in the Jewish state. Replying to a question about the consequences of such action, Rabin said, "I believe the only answer to that is to say: If you use them — the missiles — your populous areas will suffer, and there is no need to detail how."

No details of the cabinet discussion were announced, but with U.S. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger due to visit the region later this month, Israelis appeared concerned that the Palestinian attacks could hinder Kissinger's coming peace mission.

Both Arab and Israeli diplomats have said that chances for a Mideast settlement were never brighter than after Kissinger's disengagement accords on the Sinai and Golan Heights fronts were signed in January and May.

"But all that has changed now," said an Israeli official, as the Jewish state moved to stem the new upsurge of terrorist bombings, shootings and incursions that have rocked the country from the northern border to the occupied Jordanian West Bank to the Gaza strip.

The Israelis concede that there can be no lasting peace in the Mideast without a solution to the Palestinian problem, but they refuse to recognize the guerilla - led Palestinian Liberation Organization.

Jerusalem argues that it would be senseless to negotiate with an organization that is pledged to destroy the Jewish state.

Militarily, Israeli forces have bolstered their defense along the Lebanese border and moved to the offensive. While Israeli warplanes pounded the guerillas in southern Lebanon last week, the government tabbed tough retired Gen. Avraham Zeevi as a special presidential adviser on terrorism.

Within days of the appointment, the government disclosed that Israeli patrols were hunting for terrorists inside Lebanon.

Since September, seven marauders were killed and five captured in fighting along the northern border. Four Israeli soldiers were killed and a half dozen wounded.

Labor board orders WJIM to stop interference with union activities

By MARY ANNE FLOOD
State News Staff Writer

Radio - TV station WJIM, which recently settled a strike with 18 of its news workers, has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) to cease all interference with union activity.

The order was negotiated by the NLRB over a year after a complaint was filed by members of the local National Assn. of Broadcast Employees and Technicians (NABET) union, the same group who participated in the nine - week strike.

The NLRB order, which can be enforced through court action, requires station owners Gross Telecasting Inc. to end several antiunion practices and to post a list of these banned practices.

Among other things, the station management cannot:

- Interfere with the employees right to form a union;
- Interrogate employees about union activities or use surveillance techniques such as forcing employees to watch fellow workers; or
- Try to convince workers that joining the union is futile or offer benefits to workers who do not join.

The order also said the firing of two employees for union activity was a violation. The employees had previously been ordered reinstated though neither returned to the station.

H. David Camp, acting regional director of the NLRB, said the strike settlement agreement to drop charges that both strikers and management had filed with the NLRB does not affect this recent order. He said the NLRB still has a responsibility to enforce the order.

James Gross, station president, was not available for questioning Wednesday.

Though part of the strike settlement, the dropping of charges, was not written into the actual contract which contained more than 20 clauses.

"Since this is our first contract we have a lot of basic things included," Dan Jeffers, NABET local president, said. The strike was settled Sept. 25 and the negotiated contract is the first one since the NABET local was organized in the fall of 1973.

The basic clauses of the contract include management recognition of the union as the collective bargaining unit for all WJIM news employees and a clause stating that the contract would still be binding if a different union or management became representative of the parties.

The contractual pay raise is $60 a month, half of the union's original hopes of $120 a month, and up from management's original stand at $20 a month.

Further raise scales, holiday benefits, sick - pay plans and a 40 - hour week were also included. Employees cannot be summarily discharged and layoffs can only be made when the staff is reduced, according to the contract. If the position is renewed within 12 months the employee laid off must be reinstated.

Ford details energy - saving plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford administration may soon propose legislation making it more costly to consume energy and cheaper to save it, administration officials said Tuesday.

Under consideration are a "conservation fee" — anywhere from 10 to 30 cents per gallon — to discourage purchases of gasoline, and a surcharge on "excess" use of natural gas and electricity, said a spokesman for the Federal Energy Administration (FEA).

But he said those bitter pills, if administered, may be sweetened by an indirect refund of the gasoline fee and by basic gas and electric quotas free of surcharges, so the energy - saving measures would not penalize the poor.

In addition, he said, the administration is considering a tax credit to let homeowners recover part of the cost of insulating their houses.

Also under study are a requirement for industries to develop plans for saving energy and a stepped up program of public education on energy conservation.

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon told reporters at a meeting of the International Monetary Fund that President Ford would send energy conservation measures to Congress as part of his package of economic proposals, perhaps as early as next week.

Both Simon and FEA spokesmen said the proposals were not in final form and have not yet been decided by the President.

But the official FEA spokesman provided these details of the ideas under consideration.

• The "conservation fee" on gasoline might be an extra 10, 20 or 30 cents tacked on to the price, forcing the motorist to pay as much as 80 cents per gallon at the pump. But the aim would be to discourage gasoline use, not to collect money, so a way might be found to refund the fee indirectly.

Another FEA source said this might take the form of a payment of $150 per year to every taxpayer, refunding an amount equal to the gasoline fees on 10,000 miles of driving in a 20 miles - per - gallon car.

In this type of plan, the source said, some drivers would not get all their money back while others, more frugal in their driving, would net a profit. Thus taxpayers who do not drive would make a $150 profit.

The source said the U.S. Treasury would still come out ahead by some $1 billion or $2 billion a year.

The surcharges on natural gas and electricity might impose graduated fees on amounts used by homes and commercial buildings, in excess of a basic allowance.

The FEA source said large commercial buildings probably could cut their electricity consumption by some 10 to 20 per cent.

The tax credit on home insulation might be made available to home owners who install insulation or storm windows on existing houses.

• The surcharges on natural gas and electricity might impose graduated fees on amounts used by homes and commercial buildings, in excess of a basic allowance.

• The tax credit on home insulation might be made available to home owners who install insulation or storm windows on existing houses. They would pay the costs of materials and labor, and then deduct part of that cost — something like 20 to 30 per cent — from their income tax payment for that year.

• The industrial energy - conservation proposal might combine voluntary industry efforts with a legal requirement for industries to develop energy - saving plans.

Council delays proposal on stricter bicycle laws

By JOE KIRBY
State News Staff Writer
The East Lansing City Council delayed action on a proposed bicycle ordinance allowing police greater leverage in impounding bikes at Tuesday's meeting.

One of the provisions in the ordinance would allow police to impound unlicensed bikes, those not locked in racks and any bicycle ridden in an unsafe manner.

City attorney Dennis McGinty said one of the main purposes of the ordinance would be "to treat bike riders more like car owners with regard to yielding, speeding and carelessness."

Under the proposed ordinance, riders 18 and over could still be ticketed, but juveniles could have their bikes impounded and be required to pay 50 cents a day for up to 10 days impoundment fee.

The ordinance allows any residents who disagree with the impoundment to appeal the action in a hearing with the mayor.

Councilman George Griffiths said he did not like the impoundment portion of the ordinance, preferring a plan whereby the parents of juveniles would be contacted after the first few violations before any impounding took place.

Griffiths said he would like to have copies of the proposed ordinance made available to the public so citizen reaction could be gathered. Griffiths said he did not expect council to take any action on the ordinance until November.

Council also delayed action on the rezoning of the proposed parking lot site south of the post office on Abbott Road.

The post office wants to expand its parking facilities but the necessary rezoning was not recommended by the planning commission.

Council decided to postpone further action to give citizens an opportunity to attend the next meeting and voice their opinions on the rezoning.

In other action, council approved Mayor Wilbur Brookover's appointment of Dale Jager, 322 Elm Place, to the housing commission. Brookover said Jager, a 26-year-old graduate student, added the necessary balance to the commission since he is young and a renter.

Council also approved Brookover's appointment of Merrill Pearson to fill a vacancy on the Capital Area Transportation Authority (CATA) board.

PLOT MAIN FOCUS OF PORNO FILM

'Miss Aggie' an erotic success

By EDD RUDZATS
State News Reviewer

Gerard Damiano has proved to the public once again that pornography need not be a voyeuristic experience without substance save for the titillation inherent in exposing flesh to an erotically starved audience.

"Memories Within Miss Aggie" uses erotic footage to enhance the plot rather than as the sole purpose for the film.

And Damiano has quite a tale to tell, even though it is a direct steal from William Faulkner's story "A Rose for Miss Emily." Miss Aggie is a middle-aged spinster whose befuddled mind finds constant release in fantasy. Throughout the course of the film, she imagines herself as a petite golden-haired virgin, a raven-haired vixen yearning for sexual release and, ultimately, the finest whore in a high class brothel.

These flights into fantasy reveal Aggie's inability to cope with her own sexuality, a fault obviously nurtured by her father's abandonment of her mother. She admits as she grows older that it is becoming difficult to distinguish the fantasy from the reality of the past, and they begin to merge with increasing frequency. This forms the center of Damiano's film, the memories of the title taking on a frightening aspect as it becomes apparent they are not what they may appear in to be Aggie's mind.

With a steady hand, Damiano takes his film forward to a surprisingly chilling conclusion. It is this intent or purpose that makes "Memories Within Miss Aggie" more than a pornographic film. The erotic sequences are handled quite tastefully with each displaying another side of Miss Aggie's mind.

Technically, again Damiano is the master of this type of film. Like "Deep Throat" and "The Devil in Miss Jones," the level of production is of the highest caliber, making the film seem more like the product of a studio than an independent filmmaker. It is obvious Damiano knows what to do with film and that he has a sharp sense of drama.

"Memories Within Miss Aggie" tells a tale and tells it well, save for the quality of some of the performances. Several of the players in the film have difficulty with their delivery but that is only to be expected. After all, Lord Laurence Olivier and Katherine Hepburn would hardly be involved in such a production. Deborah Ashira, who plays Miss Aggie, lends credibility to the character and, as a result, the film succeeds on two levels: as a pornographic film and as a much more seriously constructed piece of storytelling.

For stargazers, Harry Reems of "Deep Throat" fame also puts in a trustworthy appearance.

"Memories Within Miss Aggie" is not your run-of-the-mill pornographic film, for it has more to say than others of its type. In fact, it's refreshing, despite a somewhat sluggish pace, to find a porno film that may emerge as the most macabre Gothic tale to be brought to the screen, perhaps since "Psycho."

'Duddy Kravitz' enthralls viewers with fast-paced, fine performance

By EDD RUDZATS
State News Reviewer

In each and everyone of us lies a desire to be somebody. Whether that somebody is a doctor, lawyer, farmer, teacher, actor or playboy, it is a dream or goal that exists within the heart of every human being.

Exactly how we go about achieving that goal depends on the individual, but each of us sets out in our own way to fulfill the dream. And Duddy Kravitz, the main character in Ted Kotcheff's film, is no different. He too wants to be somebody.

"The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz" details the efforts of one young man to reach his goal. Upon graduation from high school, Duddy Kravitz yearns for success. His impatience to be "a somebody" will not allow him to drive a taxi like his father or study medicine like his brother. Duddy wants immediate results.

In talking to his grandfather, Duddy is told that "a man without land is a nobody." So after he gets a job at a plush resort in the mountains for the summer, Duddy finds the land he wants to buy and begins to hustle in every way possible to raise the capital to purchase it. His hustling efforts form the main core of a film which emerges as one of the best to come along in recent months.

"The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz" is an effective, captivating, fast-paced film about a young man you almost love to hate. Yet it is more than just another film about a money-hungry, ambitious young man, for, thanks to Richard Dreyfuss' performance, you also like Duddy despite his tendency to be pushy, greedy and unfeeling.

There is a futility to Duddy's insatiable desire to be recognized by those around him that rises above the typical ambitious, young man characterization. From the first it is clear that whatever this character will do, his efforts or motives will be misunderstood by all. Yet Duddy forges on, in pursuit of the dollar he believes will buy him the recognition he craves so desperately.

One of the finest things in "The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz" is Richard Dreyfuss' amazingly accurate portrayal of the main character. Dreyfuss turns in a performance of mammoth proportions as he fills the screen with an arresting, vital depiction of the energetic Duddy. Duddy is the type of character who is constantly on the go, running, jumping, scratching, smiling, bouncing on his toes — and sweating like a race horse, and Dreyfuss has captured Duddy's spirit down to the smallest twitch.

Duddy emerges as so multifaceted, thanks to Dreyfuss, that the film has the power to keep the audience enthralled for over two hours. In fact, when Kotcheff's film ends, you cannot help but wonder what will become of Duddy in the future.

Set in Montreal in 1948, "The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz" paints a finely etched portrait of the "anything for a buck" tradition that was so prevalent in those times and still has not completely disappeared. Though the tale is set against a Jewish backdrop, taken directly from Mordecai Richler's novel of the same name, the film rises above the stereotype of Jewish avariciousness. People like Duddy Kravitz exist in all walks of life and in all races; one specific segment of the world's population cannot claim to hold the patent for this type of person.

It is precisely this universal quality, plus Kotcheff's sure-fire direction and Dreyfuss' performance that makes "The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz" such an exceptionally well-done, satisfying film.

"The Apprenticeship of Duddy Kravitz" is currently playing at the Meridian Four Theaters.

New planetarium show explores concept of time

By FRANK FOX
State News Staff Writer

Time. The Scythe of Time, Poe called it. We waste time and time wastes us.

But what is time? Abrams Planetarium attempts to answer this thorny question in their new show "Does Anybody Really Know What Time It Is?"

The program explores conceptions of time from primal man rising and retiring with the sun god to space-age man bending traditional ideas of absolute time with Einstein's relativity theory.

The audience journeys from metaphysical speculations on the creation of the universe to a hypothetical voyage in space at nearly the speed of light.

The timely expedition takes a side trip to a mythical land called Smarba where time is measured between the crows of a two-headed rooster called a twoster and four suns meander through an ever brilliant sky.

From Smarba, the journey brings the audience back to earth, which as a matter of fact, is slowing down.

Some 600 million years ago what we now call a day was only 21 hours long. What's more, since 1900 the earth has lost more than half a minute.

"Does Anybody Really Know What Time It Is?" will run through Oct. 27. Shows are at 8 and 10 p.m. Friday and Saturday and 2:30 and 4 p.m. Sunday. Admission prices are $1 for adults, 75 cents for MSU students with ID and 50 cents for children under 12. No preschool children will be admitted.

Orchestra needs string musicians

The East Lansing String Orchestra, directed by Glen Halik, is looking for amateur string musicians to join their weekly rehearsals.

The orchestra will meet as an East Lansing adult education course for 10 weeks on Mondays from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. at Hannah Middle School on Abbott Road.

Halik said interested musicians should call him at 332-2640 to arrange an audition.

He particularly needs double bass and viola players.

"The string orchestra was designed primarily for people who are not playing in a symphony or string ensemble," Halik said. "We have an average of 20 to 25 players at each rehearsal."

The orchestra began in January with a minigrant from the Michigan Council of the Arts.

About 30 members of the group gave a concert at Hannah Middle School May 31, and they plan to perform at a fine arts festival in January at the Lansing Civic Center.

The fee is $5 for the 10 weeks for school district residents, and $7.50 for nonresidents.

Fighting Irish lacking previous punch

By CHARLES JOHNSON
State News Sports Writer

It was ten months ago that Notre Dame defeated Alabama in the Sugar Bowl to finish the season as the No. 1 collegiate team in the nation. With a team stocked full of talented returnees, the Irish's prospects for the future seemed nothing short of phenomenal.

The future is now for Notre Dame and much to the dismay of coach Ara Parseghian, the Irish have found themselves forced to play without many of the players who were supposed to have led them to a second straight national crown.

Coming off a stunning 31-20 upset loss to Purdue last weekend, the Irish will face MSU at Spartan Stadium Saturday with hopes of regaining some of the prestige they lost as a result of the defeat.

In the line of bad luck, Notre Dame has left no stone unturned since the end of last season. A number of injuries and bizarre incidents have been responsible for eight of last year's starting players being put out of action.

The most damaging casualty to date has been the suspension of four starters last summer for an alleged rape involving a student. Halfback Al Hunter, safety Luther Bradley and defensive ends Ross Browner and Willie Frye were suspended indefinitely by school administrators.

Tim Simon, first string free safety, lost the sight in his left eye as a result of a summer accident in which he and a friend had been fencing with sticks. After getting the go-ahead to play, Simon suffered a knee injury in early fall drills.

Senior halfback Eric Pennick suffered a severe ankle injury during spring practice and is doubtful for the season.

Bob Zanot, starting defensive halfback, sustained a knee injury shortly before the season opener and will be out for the season.

Though the situation Notre Dame finds itself faced with is less than ideal, Parseghian is still optimistic that things may work out.

"He's taking a wait-and-see attitude," Notre Dame sports information director Roger Valdiserri said. "The game with MSU Saturday should help to make some things clearer as to how our situation really stands."

Despite the player shortages, the Irish still have a potent offense, anchored by quarterback Tom Clements.

Clements has gained a total of 729 yards through the air and on the ground thus far this season and is classified as an authentic contender for the Heisman Trophy. Behind the protection of a powerful offensive line, Clements has connected on 45 of 74 passes for a superb 61 per cent completion average.

Twenty-one of Clements' passes have been caught by wide receiver Pete Demerly, for a total of 326 yards worth of the aerials.

Notre Dame will carry a 2-1 record into Saturday's game and will be trying to defend its seventh place standing in the national collegiate polls.

This has been a trying year so far for Notre Dame coach Ara Parseghian. Since last season he has lost eight starters, many because of unusual circumstances. The Irish sport a 2-1 mark this year.

RAISE RECORD TO 2 - 0

Spartan booters edge Calvin, 2 - 1

By JACK WALKDEN
State News Sports Writer

Peer Brunnschweiler scored two goals, the second breaking a tie midway through the second half, as the MSU soccer team edged Calvin College, 2-1, Wednesday at the Spartan soccer field.

The victory was the Spartans' second straight this season, while Calvin fell to 2-3-1.

Approximately 300 fans braved the icy temperatures to watch the MSU home opener. "I was very interested to see the crowd there backing soccer up again," Spartan coach Ed Rutherford said.

Brunnschweiler, who has now tallied four goals in the first two games, broke a 1-1 tie at the 20-minute mark of the second half after taking a pass from Jim Nugent. The East Lansing High School graduate scored the hard way, heading the ball into the net.

Brunnschweiler's first goal gave MSU a 1-0 lead at halftime. He broke past the defense and scored unassisted at the 21-minute mark of the first half.

Jim Hengeveld put a penalty shot past Spartan goalie Gary Wilkinson seven minutes into the second half to tie the game before Brunnschweiler won it.

Wilkinson stopped 12 Calvin shots, making two key saves late in the game.

"Wilkinson was tested a little more against Calvin than he was against Eastern Michigan," Rutherford said. "When Calvin put the pressure on us in the late moments, our entire defense rose to the occasion and did real well, though."

Rutherford called Calvin a

"well conditioned, well coached team," but added that the visitors had a tremendous advantage because they were playing their sixth game, while MSU was playing only its second.

He praised the play of defenseman Phil Smith as a key to the victory. Smith broke up a breakaway in the final two minutes to preserve the win.

Deadlines near for IM entries

The entry deadline for Men's Intramural touch football, independent volleyball, fraternity bowling and open soccer teams is noon Friday.

The annual Men's IM open tennis tournament is scheduled to begin Tuesday. All students, faculty and staff members are eligible and may sign up in 208 Men's Intramural Bldg. or call 355-5250. An organizational meeting is planned for Monday in Men's IM Bldg.

A Women's Intramural touch football clinic for all officials and team representatives is scheduled for 7 p.m. today in 137 Women's Intramural Bldg.

Volleyball and touch football schedules will be available at noon Friday in 121 Women's IM Bldg.

Grid tickets still remain for ND, Michigan games

Because of cancellations, a few general public tickets for the Notre Dame-MSU football here Saturday and the Michigan-MSU game at Ann Arbor Oct. 12 remain on sale at the athletic ticket office in Jenison Fieldhouse.

The ticket windows are open from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Baseball's playoffs under way Saturday

NEW YORK (UPI) — The best-of-five major league playoffs open Saturday with the Oakland A's hosting the Baltimore Orioles in the American League and the Los Angeles Dodgers traveling to the home park of the National League East champion.

Pittsburgh held a one-game lead over St. Louis Wednesday on the final day of the regular season in the N.L. East.

In the American League, the A's and Orioles play their second game at Oakland on Sunday and then move East to Baltimore for games on Oct. 8-9 and 10.

The N.L.'s Eastern Division team hosts the circuit's second playoff game on Sunday, with the playoffs switching to Los Angeles for the remaining games on Oct. 8-9 and 10.

The World Series opens with a two-day set in the National League champion's park on Oct. 12 and 13. The American League champions host the next three games on Oct. 15, 16 and 17. If additional games are needed, they will be played on N.L. grounds on Oct. 19-20.

Spartans host rowing regatta here Saturday

The MSU Crew Club will host its first annual fall rowing regatta Saturday at Grand River Park in Lansing.

Festivities begin at 9:30 a.m. with the dedication of the boathouse to C. Rowland Stebbins in appreciation of his support of the club. The races follow and will be over by 11 a.m.

Teams from MSU, Notre Dame, Wayne State and Grand Valley State College will participate. The Spartan women's team will make its debut, joining the men's squads in the competition.

MEETINGS

Women interested in competing on the MSU women's swimming team should meet at 4 p.m. today in the lower pool area of the Women's IM Building.

Freshmen interested in trying out with the MSU baseball team should attend a meeting at 7:30 p.m. today in 225 Jenison Fieldhouse.

The MSU Varsity Club will hold its first meeting at 6:30 p.m. Sunday in the Varsity Club Room at Spartan Stadium.

Bill seeks campaign limit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic and Republican presidential candidates would be limited to spending $20 million each in their general election campaigns and the government would pick up the tab under legislation awaiting final touches.

The measure would place both candidates on an equal financial footing. By contrast, in 1972 former President Richard M. Nixon's re-election costs ran $60 million while Democrat Sen. George S.

McGovern's losing effort cost $30 million to $35 million.

In addition, candidates seeking a presidential nomination could get up to $5 million in government subsidies to help them in their races. They would be limited to spending $10 million.

Minor party presidential candidates also could qualify for federal campaign subsidies, depending on their percentage of the popular vote.

And up to $2 million would be provided in tax funds to finance the national nominating conventions of the political parties.

Public financing of Senate and House races, either primary or general election campaigns, is out. It was dropped by Senate - House conferees Tuesday in a victory for the House. Senate conferees gave up on this issue after their House counterparts refused to budge.

That removed a major stumbling block to working out a compromise between differing Senate and House versions of the legislation.

Compromises also were reached with respect of enforcement machinery and to spending limits for candidates for the House.

Another meeting of the conferees is set for Thursday when, members said, they hoped to complete work on a compromise draft.

Sen. Howard W. Cannon, D-Nev., chairman of the Senate conferees, expressed hope that final congressional action on the legislation could be taken before the start of a recess for the November elections.

The bill would require substantially reduced levels of expenditures and contributions for campaigns for federal offices. An individual would be barred from contributing more than $1,000 to an election campaign of a candidate and more than $25,000 in any one year to all candidates for federal office.

The amount that an organization could contribute to a candidate's general election, primary or runoff campaign would be $5,000.

In-kind contributions by volunteer campaign workers, like taking voters to the polls or distributing literature, do not count.

The spending limits for House candidates would be $70,000, both in primary and general election campaigns, plus an additional 20 percent for fund-raising activities.

For Senate candidates the limit in primaries would be the higher of $100,000 or 8 cents times the voting age population in their state.

Union meeting

should the proposed union actually come into legal existence and higher wages must be paid, then only people who can work full time will be employed in residence hall cafeterias.

Cain answered this charge with: "I don't know where the University will find someone to work 13 minutes at breakfast, a half-hour at lunch and an hour and a half at dinner, except students."

Student sentiment throughout the meeting ranged from monetary concerns to general work grievances.

During the question and answer session of the meeting, student concerns addressed monetary issues rather than anything else. Dues, pay hikes, suggestions for additional benefits to be negotiated and possible discrimination in employment were discussed.

A contingent of maintenance workers at Owen Hall said after the meeting that they did not have any specific complaints about their working conditions but were most concerned with wages.

Church advice available free to war resisters

NEW YORK (AP) — For all those Vietnam War resisters out there, wherever you are, the telephone number to call to get church advice about your situation is code 317, then 635 - 8259. It's free.

A special counseling service, set up by the National Council of Churches to aid those affected by President Ford's "earned re-entry" program, said many of them are poor, out of touch and needed the free number.

"Nobody knows where many of them are," a spokesman said. "A lot of them have been living underground and have no idea about where to go to get help."

The counseling center has been set up in Indianapolis, near Fort Harrison, the center to which all deserters must first return, and will accept toll-free calls around the clock from those seeking legal and other advice.

Correction

A story dealing with the problems of parking on campus in Wednesday's State News incorrectly said that students could park overnight in any gated lot. In reality, no one is allowed to park in any gated parking lot overnight.

EDITOR CALLS PLAYBOY VICTORIAN

Penthouse gains ground on rival

By PAT NARDI
State News Staff Writer
His name may be Goode, but mother probably would not approve of his work.

James Goode is the executive editor of Penthouse, an international magazine for men, which is fact challenging Playboy's monopoly on the girlie magazine market.

"We are neck and neck with Playboy in domestic newsstand sales, and in some cities we are ahead of Playboy. Goode said he was in town to tape an interview with WJIM.

Goode attributes the success of Penthouse to the candid presentation of the girls. Penthouse has a monthly circulation of 5,350,000.

"Our girls are natural as opposed to the phony attitudes of Playboy's playmates. The Playboy model is a tease; she looks right at the camera. She has no intention of going to bed with you. Actually, Playboy is a very Victorian magazine," Goode said.

"Our girls are more natural. They don't look at the camera. Quite often our girls even close their eyes," he said.

"We do not approach photography of our girls like butchers dissecting carcasses. Our pictures show emotional feeling. You feel more than you see in these pictures," Goode explained.

"We are very candid. Nothing is dirty. Sex is a very fundamental biological impulse. Are we to pretend that it doesn't happen? All human beings make love," Goode said.

Penthouse was the first magazine to show pubic hair regularly, Goode said. Though Playboy first ran very tiny pictures exposing pubic hair, Goode said, Penthouse was the first to regularly run large pictures.

"I heard it said there are a whole generation of boys who didn't know girls had hair because they were looking at Playboy," Goode said.

Goode said Penthouse gets very little hate mail from women. In fact, Penthouse has a larger feminine readership than MS magazine, he said.

Besides exposing physical beauty, Goode said an important objective of Penthouse is to expose political corruption.

"We are muckrakers. We do not lie. We have no considerations besides responsibility to our readers."

For examples of muckracking, he cited the October issue's article "The Old Shell Game," which claims oil companies have faked oil shortages on many occasions to raise the price of gasoline.

Future issues will discuss the perilous state of the environment and the coming demise of paper money, he said.

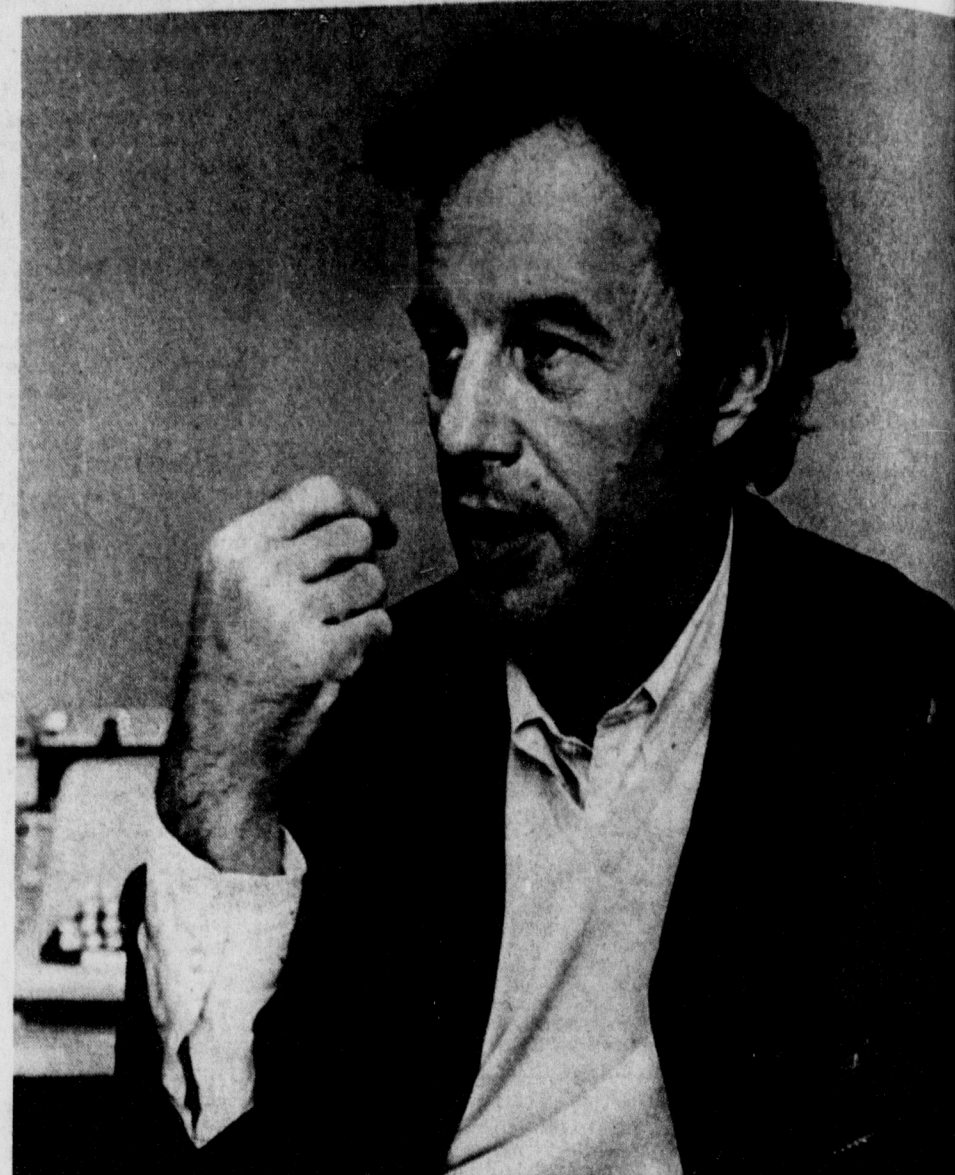

"We hate to sound like prophets of gloom, but we'll see you in the next bread line!" Goode said laughing.

He said it is the job of the media to get rid of politicians like President Ford, Rockefeller and Henry Kissinger.

When asked if there was any politician he did like, Goode emphatically replied, "No!"

Goode didn't claim to be ahead of Playboy in numbers of subscriptions, but said subscriptions cause magazines to lose enormous amounts of money.

"That's why Life went broke. Newsstand sales is the only circulation that matters."

James Goode, executive editor of Penthouse magazine, says his magazine and Playboy are about equal in newsstand sales, but that Penthouse is overtaking its rival because its girls are more natural than the "phonies" in Playboy.

States renew mining firm suit

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Michigan and two other states renewed Tuesday a request that Supreme Court Justice Harry A. Blackmun stop Reserve Mining Co.'s daily dumping of wastes into Lake Superior at Silver Bay, Minn.

The three states told Blackmun that the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals seems "determined to let this private operation continue to pollute and threaten the health of thousands, and make large scale profits for the indefinite future."

Blackmun, who administers the 8th Circuit, refused on July 9 to block the dumping of polluting taconite wastes, pending final resolution of the lawsuit.

The states said they are well aware that a second request "is highly unusual procedure." But they said subsequent actions of the appeals court have resulted in such confusion and delay as to require the high court to exercise "its extraordinary powers."

"The actions taken by the Court of Appeals . . . demonstrate a greater concern for the economic health of Reserve Mining Co. and its parents, Armco Steel and Republic Steel, than for the physical health of the public," the application said.

The states enclosed a recent article from the New York Times indicating that asbestos fibers, which are in the water supply at Duluth, Minn., and other Lake Superior areas, may cause cancer after only a very brief exposure.

Recently, district Judge Miles W. Lord of Minneapolis, whose order that the dumping stop immediately has been continually blocked by the circuit court, held more hearings on alternative methods of disposal. He vetoed a plan proposed by the company, and various other issues are still before him.

The lawsuit against Reserve Mining was brought by the Justice Dept., the three states and some environmentalists. The waste rock, called tailings, contains many minerals which spread over several thousand square miles at all depths, according to the complaint.
