UMW president says coal workers to wait for safe pact despite stress

WASHINGTON (AP) — United Mine Workers (UMW) President Arnold Miller said Monday that "coal miners will not be bludgeoned into accepting" an inadequate contract no matter how great the public pressure for reopening the mines.

"As of 12:01 a.m. Tuesday we are on strike," the union chief declared.

Miller said that while a prolonged strike will be hard for the nation to bear, "the 120,000 working members of our union will mine no coal until they have a contract they can work under safely and live under with decency."

Most of UMW - organized mines, which produce two - thirds of the nation's coal, were already closed Monday for Veterans Day in advance of the midnight strike deadline.

Miller said that "right now we have a two - week strike," but added that the duration would increase for as long as the negotiations drag on.

Earlier in the day, UMW Vice President Mike Trbovich said a tentative contract settlement was unlikely before the end of the week.

At a meeting with newsmen at the UMW headquarters during a recess in the negotiations, Miller said there was no chance that his members would be willing to extend the old contract beyond the deadline or shorten the ratification process required for approving a new pact.

Coal production came almost to a halt at the end of the Saturday shift and is not expected to resume until the miners ratify a new contract, a process the union says will require about 10 days once the negotiations reach a tentative agreement.

Monday was Veterans Day holiday for the miners in many states and few of the mines were in full operation, though stockpiling and loading continued at some facilities. Some minor isolated picketing was reported in southern West Virginia.

Industries that depend on coal, such as railroads and steel mills, prepared for the miners' strike. Most indicated they would not feel the effects for about a week.

Electric utility companies that use coal have reserve supplies but are concerned about the length of the strike.

The Tennessee Valley authority, the nation's largest coal user, already has asked for voluntary power cuts of up to 20 per cent.

The steel industry prepared contingency operating plans. Industry analysts predicted layoffs and production cutbacks if the strike lasts more than two weeks. I. W. Abel, president of the United Steelworkers of America, pledged his union's support to the coal miners.

The impending strike already is having a scattered impact on some industries and economists predict that if the walkout lasts much beyond two weeks, it could have serious consequences for the economy.

Three major railroads, which rely on hauling coal for more than 10 per cent of their revenues, already have posted layoff notices.

The federal government says a mine strike of about a month will force about 400,000 layoffs nationwide, and 1.7 million if it lasts eight weeks.

Trbovich said he was concerned that if the contract was not settled this week, the strike could last well into December.

He explained that the miners begin working on their Christmas pay the first week of December and said if they are still out at that time there will not be much of an incentive for them to go back before the holiday.

The union leader said the major obstacle holding up the settlement was the size of the economic package dealing with wages, pensions, sick pay and other benefits.

The UMW has no strike fund and with the rank - and - file losing their paychecks in the strike, a UMW spokesman said Miller and his 166 - member staff will go off salary for the duration of the walkout.

In the meantime, the union has made arrangements through its credit union for loans to its members and for sending out instructions informing them about food stamps and available welfare benefits.

The union's headquarters, a six - story stone structure located about three blocks from the White House, is heated by coal and a spokesman said that sufficient supplies were stockpiled in the basement to last until summer.

Ford plans new method for handling Nixon tapes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford Administration has signed a tentative agreement by which the special Watergate prosecutor would have ready access to the tapes and papers left behind by former President Richard M. Nixon.

At the same time, the proposal would prohibit delivery of any of the materials to Nixon until the prosecutor is satisfied they are not needed in his investigations.

The new agreement was submitted to District Judge Charles Richey on Monday. It was signed over the weekend by Presidential Counsel Philip Buchen, the heads of the Secret Service and the General Services Administration and Special Prosecutor Henry S. Ruth Jr.

The pact would alter drastically — in the prosecutor's favor — the terms of a written understanding unveiled at the time of Nixon's pardon by Ford. Richey is hearing several challenges to that original agreement and his approval is necessary for any modifications.

In papers filed later Monday, Nixon's Washington attorney, Herbert J. Miller Jr., pleaded that Richey uphold the original agreement in its entirety. He criticized the new deal struck between the White House and Ruth as "depriving Mr. Nixon of any opportunity whatsoever to protect the presidential privilege of confidentiality."

The special prosecutor's office had no role in the Sept. 6 pact between Ford and Nixon.

Under the original understanding, the Nixon materials were to be forwarded quickly to the former President in California. And, unless Nixon cooperated, it would have forced the prosecutor to resort to court action any time he wanted to examine a tape or document.

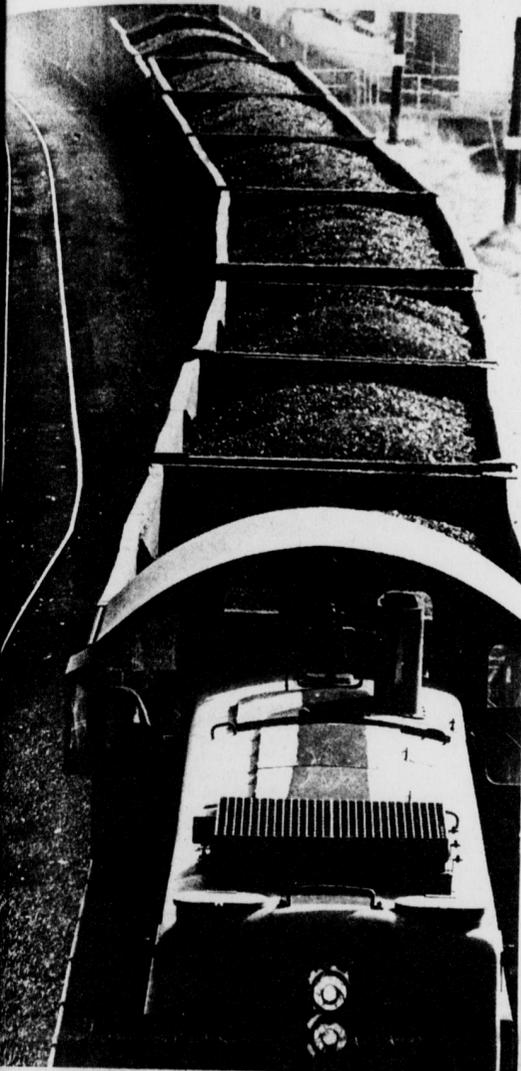

Richey already has barred shipment of the items pending the resolution of the civil suits before him. One such effort calls for dissolving the original agreement entirely and declaring the materials government property — with full public access.

The new pact, if approved, would not negate Nixon's property claim, nor would it make the materials immediately available for scrutiny to anyone but the prosecutor.

But it would enable Ruth to obtain potential evidence, perhaps be exposed later in the courts, without subpoena, hence avoiding delays that might otherwise occur. None of the material could be removed from the White House complex, moreover, "without an indication from the special prosecutor that he has no further need for such portions."

White House counsel Philip W. Buchen, General Services Administrator Arthur F. Sampson, Secretary Service director H. Stuart Knight and the special prosecutor's office jointly asked Richey to hold a hearing Wednesday and grant approval for the new method for handling the records of the Nixon presidency.

Although coal shipments are still being made, most coal mines were closed Monday, Veterans Day, and will probably remain closed until a new contract is ratified by the United Mine Workers. Most industries have substantial coal reserves and should not feel the full effect of the strike for some time.

MSU veterans regard bonus as fair deal

By JOHN TINGWALL
State News Staff Writer

Call it "mad money," a gift from heaven or a little padding in a flimsy, bitten wallet.

However MSU Vietnam - era veterans receive their bonus from the State of Michigan, almost all are relishing the sight of the day when they can cash checks of up to $600 for their service in armed forces, thanks to voter approval of Proposal B.

"I'll use mine for my education," said Reid, 24 - year - old Vietnam veteran said. "The GI bill falls far short of covering all the financial needs of a student."

Field, a senior majoring in fisheries and wildlife, is one of approximately 1,800 MSU veterans and 420,000 veterans nationwide eligible for a portion of the $1 billion in benefits voters approved last week ago. Bonuses will be awarded to Michigan veterans who served in the armed forces between 1961 and 1973, and who lived in the state at least six months before induction.

"I'll probably just use it as mad money to do something frivolous with it," one veteran graduating in December said. "I'll take a vacation on the West coast with my wife and daughter after graduation."

Whatever their plans, most veterans on campus agree that the bonus, which ranges a maximum $600 to Vietnam veterans and $15 per month of service to noncombat veterans up to $450, is a fair one.

"It's pretty fair compared to other states," Kenneth Richards, a 27 - year - old senior, who served in Okinawa, said. "It would be hard to justify a lot more than what they've given us."

Wilburn Holland, a 27 - year - old senior majoring in journalism, said he felt fortunate to be in a state offering a bonus.

"I could live in a state offering no bonus, or without plans to even consider one," Holland said.

The bonus, approved by a Michigan voters by an overwhelming 1,500,000 to 634,000 margin, makes Michigan the 17th state to award their Vietnam veterans a bonus.

Dan Zimmerman, MSU Veterans representative on campus, said he expected most veterans on campus would use their bonus for education bills.

"If not for education, then they'll probably use it to pay the rent that the GI bill doesn't cover," he said.

Greg Wood, a sophomore who served 2½ years in Germany, said he was unsure how much he would be eligible for, but did not think he deserved it.

"For soaking up a lot of beer and chasing the frauleins, I'm not sure I should be getting anything," Wood said.

Others, though, were bitter. "The $600 is better than nothing, but no monetary reparation can change the effect service in Nam has on a guy," Jim Keefe, a senior and Vietnam veteran said.

"I'm really happy with this," one veteran senior said. "It really shows a sentiment for what the veterans did, I really thought people forgot about veterans."

In 1972, Michigan voters rejected a similar bonus proposal that would have provided educational benefits of up to $2,000 in addition to bonuses. The $260 million bond issue was defeated by a close 1.60 million to 1.49 million vote.

"I would liked to have seen the educational benefits tacked on again," Holland said. "Six hundred dollars doesn't really go too far today."

Veterans will have to sustain their excitement over bonuses for at least a couple months, however, since state officials say the first checks will probably not be ready before spring. The state legislature must enact enabling legislation when it reconvenes Monday, including establishing terms for the bonus — financing bonds, and selecting an agency to handle the veterans' applications.

Officials of the State Veterans Trust Fund estimate a four to six month delay before payments are made.

"I'm disappointed I'll have to wait till next spring," a veteran student said. "But if I waited this long since my service in Vietnam, I can wait a little longer."

Woody's 'sportsmanship' rapped

Woody Hayes mirrors the frustration and disappointment felt by his team and all OSU fans at Spartan Stadium after the Buckeyes' 16 to 13 upset by MSU, Saturday.

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — Miles, McMillin, editor and publisher of the Madison Capital Times, said in his column Monday that Ohio State football coach Woody Hayes "is poisoning Big Ten football."

McMillin referred to Hayes' nationally - televised lashing out at a fan as Hayes crossed the playing field amid confusion at the end of the game, which MSU won, 16 - 13.

"I tuned in the Ohio State - Michigan State game Saturday just in time to see Woody Hayes put on another display of the 'sportsmanship' for which he is noted," McMillin wrote.

"This time it wasn't a photographer or one of his own players or breaking up the yardmarkers. This time it marked the occasion of defeat by slugging a young kid who made the mistake of approaching his imperial majesty," McMillin wrote.

"Each year at this time people with ordinary respect for civilized decencies have to rise up and ask when, if ever, something will be done about this man's assaults on these decencies," McMillin wrote.

"Obviously it will not be done by Ohio State authorities. They have long ago sold their trust to the win - or - else cult who have made Hayes the unchallenged ruler of that institution," he added.

"He (Hayes) is poisoning Big Ten football just as Nixon poisoned the politics of this nation to the point that millions have lost confidence in our political institutions," he wrote. "And if you think there isn't a revolution against Hayes as there is against Nixon, you missed all the signs of the national exultation over the weekend at the news of Michigan State's historic victory."

MSU ranked in top 20 by AP, UPI services

For the first time in two years, MSU's football team has cracked into the top 20 national ratings of both wire services.

In the United Press International (UPI) poll, which is voted on by 34 college coaches and the country, the Spartans are ranked 13th. In the Associated Press (AP) ratings, MSU owns the 15th spot.

The AP poll is selected by members of the media across the country.

The last time a Spartan team made the listings was back in 1972 when Duffy Snodgrass' team defeated Ohio State, 19-12.

However, the Spartans disappeared from the poll a week later when they fell to Michigan, 14-10.

Oklahoma moved up to No. 1 on the UPI poll, replacing formerly top - rated Ohio State, while Oklahoma grabbed the top spot from OSU in the AP poll.

Ohio State dropped to third in the UPI poll and fell to fourth in the AP poll.

Women priest holds service

The Rev. Allison Cheek of Annandale, Va., on Sunday defied a bishop's orders and became the first woman to conduct a communion service at an Episcopal Church in the United States.

By holding the service at St. Stephen and the Incarnation Episcopal Church in Washington, D.C., both Cheek and the congregation have invited formal charges of violating disciplinary laws of the church.

The service was held in defiance of orders from the Rt. Rev. William F. Creighton, bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington.

Cheek was among 11 women who were elevated to the priesthood last July during a service in Philadelphia. But the denomination's House of Bishops declared the ordinations invalid.

Nixon may be released soon

Former President Richard M. Nixon is no longer in serious condition and may be released from the hospital later this week, his doctors said Monday.

Though still physically weak, Nixon continues to improve and is once again taking anticoagulant drugs to prevent further blood clotting in his phlebitis-stricken left leg.

Nixon's personal physician, John C. Lungren, and his surgeon, Eldon B. Hickman, said in a written report Monday that the former president's lung problems — a slight case of pneumonia in the right lung and fluid in the lining surrounding the left one — are continuing to clear up.

Nixon is reportedly eating normal foods and walking more in his room at Memorial Hospital Medical Center at Long Beach, Calif.

Band plays 18 hours nonstop

Director Richard Harvey of the Escondido High School band says his arms are "like lead, but my spirits are light as a feather."

The reason for this is his band played nonstop for 18 hours in a fund-raising effort in Escondido, Calif.

City officials and businessmen cheered the players on, contributing about $1,800 in cash and $2,500 in pledges for new uniforms.

The band played almost everything its members knew and rested five minutes every hour. Its effort began at 8 a.m. Saturday, ending at midnight.

Leftists demand probe of CIA

Five leftist Argentine congressmen demanded Monday that the government probe a possible link between the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) and a wave of right-wing terrorism in Argentina.

The legislators introduced a resolution in the House of Deputies asking that the government investigate "the possible intervention" of the CIA in Argentine affairs.

The draft resolution said that the Argentine government should particularly investigate the CIA's connection with the increase of threats, attacks, kidnappings, tortures and politically motivated murders since Hector Campora was installed as president last year.

Seven die in African mud slide

Hundreds of tons of mud washed down a shaft at the Impala Platinum Mine, the world's second largest, killing at least seven people, a company spokesman in Johannesburg, South Africa, said Monday.

The spokesman said the dead included two white miners and "not less than" five black miners, but he denied reports that 2,000 to 3,000 miners were trapped.

An Impala official said the slime poured into the shaft after heavy rains forced a dam to burst at the mine in Bafokeng, near Rustenburg 100 miles from Johannesburg.

Israeli planes bomb Lebanon

Israeli planes bombed guerilla targets in Lebanon Monday for the first time in three weeks and the Lebanese Defense Ministry said the raiders caused scores of casualties and heavy damage.

A communique issued in Beirut said there were two Lebanese villagers among the dead and seven among the wounded, implying the rest of the casualties were Palestinians.

It said 12 Phantom fighter-bombers took part in the raid, which lasted 17 minutes.

Tanaka makes cabinet shifts

Japanese Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka replied to criticism of his policies and personal fortune Monday with a token reshuffle of his cabinet and a denial he was guilty of any financial wrongdoing.

The moves ended speculation that Tanaka would resign following the scheduled visit to Japan next week by President Ford.

Tanaka changed 13 ministers in his 21 member cabinet but retained Masayoshi Ohira as finance minister, Toshio Kimura as foreign minister and Yasuhiro Nakason as minister of international trade and industry, the three key posts.

Ex-Deputy Prime Minister Takeo Miki said Japanese voters would view the reshuffle as an effort by Tanaka to retain power despite his low popularity in public opinion polls.

Attempt to block probe traced

Gen. Vernon Walters, deputy CIA director, leaves U.S. District Court in Washington Monday after giving testimony in the Watergate coverup trial.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Watergate prosecutors traced Monday how former President Richard M. Nixon and his aides tried to top Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) officials to convince the FBI to rein its investigation of the break-in at Democratic National Committee headquarters.

Lt. Gen. Vernon A. Walters, deputy director of the CIA, and L. Patrick Gray III, former acting head of the FBI, testified at a session of the Watergate coverup trial in which a tape was played of Nixon agreeing that the FBI probe had to be brought under control.

The Watergate prosecutors played tape segments of the meetings between Nixon and H. R. Haldeman on June 23, 1972, six days after the break-in.

Between the second and third meetings, Haldeman and John D. Ehrlichman met with Walters and Richard Helms, then CIA director, and Haldeman instructed Walters to tell Gray that the CIA would attempt to trace money found on the Watergate burglars to compromise covert CIA activities in Mexico.

'Obstructive words'

When defense attorneys tried to block a portion of Gray's testimony about his subsequent meeting with Walters, prosecutor James F. Neal argued that "these are the obstructive words, there is no other way you can show the clear agency from Haldeman to the former president of the United States Ehrlichman to Walters to Gray, and that is obstruction. We've got to be able to show the very words that obstructed the investigation for two weeks in this case."

Referring to the message Walters carried to Gray, Neal said "They (the FBI) weren't about to uncover anything except a bug to bug Democratic National Committee headquarters."

During his first meeting with Nixon, Haldeman advised the former president that the FBI investigation of the break-in was now leading into some productive areas, because they've been able to trace the money."

CIA involvement protected

He suggested that Gray be told that there was CIA involvement that had to be protected.

Nixon agreed and told Haldeman, "You call them in... it's tough... Don't lie to them to the extent to say there is involvement, but just say this is sort of a comedy of errors."

Haldeman, Ehrlichman, former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell, former Asst. Atty. Gen. Robert C. Mardian and Kenneth Parkinson, one-time attorney for Nixon's re-election committee, are on trial on charges of conspiring to obstruct the Watergate investigation.

Nixon was named an unindicted coconspirator by the grand jury that brought charges against the other five.

Gray said the first White House aide he talked to about the break-in was Ehrlichman, who told him that "John Dean was going to be conducting an investigation for the White House on the Watergate matter, and that I should deal directly with Dean."

Gray was named acting director of the FBI upon the death of J. Edgar Hoover in May 1972. He resigned on April 27, 1973, after it became apparent that because of his handling of the Watergate investigation the Senate would not confirm his appointment.

Walters described the White House meeting on June 23, which he quoted Haldeman as saying, "The bugging of Watergate was making a lot of noise and the Democrats were trying to maximize it, the investigation was leading to a lot of important people and it was getting worse."

Supreme Court declines hearing on validity of coverup indictments

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court declined Monday to hear arguments on whether the indictments of the six men charged with participating in the Watergate coverup should be invalidated. The court let stand a decision by the U.S. Court of Appeals rejecting a motion by H. R. Haldeman to strike down the indictments.

Haldeman, former White House chief of staff and one of the defendants in the current coverup trial, contended the grand jury which returned the indictments was not legally in existence.

Federal rules of criminal procedure adopted by the Supreme Court limit the life of grand juries to 18 months, except for special grand juries dealing with organized crime.

Congress extended the life of the Watergate grand jury beyond 18 months at the request of then Atty. Gen. Elliott L. Richardson.

Haldeman argued that Congress did not have the power to do this because it had delegated the rulemaking power to the Supreme Court and provided that "all laws in conflict with such rules shall be of no further force or effect."

U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica rejected Haldeman's

motion to discuss the indictment July 9, saying he could see "nothing that restricts the power of Congress to repeal, amend, or supersede its delegation of authority."

On Aug. 14, the appeals court upheld Sirica's order without asking for a government response. One of the six participating judges, George E. McKinnon, said he would have asked then-Special Prosecutor Leon Jaworski to respond.

Specifically, McKinnon wanted Jaworski's answer to the question of "whether it is a denial of due process for Congress, at the request of the special prosecutor, to enact special legislation for this case only to authorize continuance of an existing regular grand jury, the personnel of which was already fixed and public and whose attitudes were well known to the special prosecutor."

Jaworski responded that extension of the grand jury was "rationally justified."

Lansing ecology organization offers MSU credit to workers

Students interested in making solid contributions in the environmental area are urged to do so, for credit, by the Michigan Student Environmental Confederation (MSEC).

Barb Clark of MSEC said students can work for the Lansing-based organization and get MSU credits for it through independent study.

Clark said the group is looking for people from science, journalism, natural resources, political science, environmental education and anyone else interested.

Two people have taken advantage of the independent study program already, according to Clark, and "it worked out real well."

Students can either become involved in short term projects, such as writing articles for Michigan Earth Beat (published by MSEC), or long term projects, such as monitoring government agencies, programs or legislation.

MSEC was formed to monitor and investigate the state legislature and to encourage students to participate in environmental issues.

UFW supporters send petitions to wine firm

By SUE McMILLIN
State News Staff Writer

Petitions containing more than 3,000 signatures were sent to Ernest and Giulio Gallo Monday by representatives of the United Farmworkers (UFW) Boycott Committee.

The 3,152 signatures are those of residents of the MSU community who have pledged support for the UFW's boycott of wines produced in Modesta, Calif., by the Gallo brothers. The boycott began late in 1973 and will continue until Gallo agrees to renegotiate the contract it previously held with the UFW.

Gallo entered into its present contract with the Teamsters Union on July 9, 1973. The UFW has claimed that the contract provides lower wage levels and eliminates crucial health and safety protections, particularly those against deadly pesticides.

The UFW has also claimed that Gallo has "threatened farm workers with discharge or other economic reprisals if they refuse to abandon their support of the UFW and become dues-paying members of the Teamsters."

"UFW was the union of the workers in the Gallo fields, until last year," John Masterson, a member of the local boycott committee, said. "The contracts they worked under were good ones and popular ones. They gave the workers some dignity. Yet, without telling the workers, they (Gallo) secretly signed new contracts with the Teamsters in 1973 that wiped out most of the real benefits of the old contracts."

The local boycott committee began gathering signatures in support of the UFW spring term. The drive continued over the summer and through the first half of fall term.

The letter which accompanied the petitions said: "We are sending you the signed pledges which we have at this time. We want you to know that this is only the beginning."

The wines that are included in the boycott are: Gallo, Carlo, Rossi, Boone's Farm, Ripple, Paisano, Eden Roc, Spanada, Wolfe and Sons, Thunderbird, Red Mountain, Tyrolia, Triple Jac Andre and all other wines produced in Modesta, Calif.

The envelope containing the signatures was sent by registered mail to ensure that it reached the Gallo brothers.

A declaration of monetary value is required for a package to be sent by registered mail. When asked about the monetary value of this package, Masterson replied:

"It has no monetary value, but it has great value to us."

DEMOCRATS CONTROL BOARD

Unit to stress health care

By DAVE GUZNICZAK
State News Staff Writer

An increased emphasis on health and social services in Ingham County will be top priority of the newly elected county commission, according to a post-election survey of commissioners.

The new board is expected to be more liberal with 14 out of the 21 commission seats held by Democrats. The present composition is an 11-10 Democratic majority. The difference is expected to account for some significant changes when the new board convenes after Jan. 1st.

"There will be a strong emphasis on strengthening mental health programs," Richard Conlin, re-elected 10th District Democratic commissioner from the East Lansing area, said.

Conlin had 1,270 votes, compared to 817 for Republican candidate Billy Hanel and 928 for Human Rights candidate Mary Ellen Karczewski.

Democrat Marilyn Trezise remarked, "I'm hoping health services will be improved and enlarged."

Trezise's win over Republican incumbent Herbert Norton in the 1st District was one of the three important races where Democrats won formerly Republican seats.

Before the student vote became a factor in county races in 1972, the board was comprised of 13 Republicans and eight Democrats.

"I want to see extended care facilities for senior citizens maintained and improved," Grank Guerriero, Republican winner in the 3rd District, said.

James Heysler, 8th District winner, said, "I think with a slightly more liberal board, there will be less opposition to passing laws such as the day care center and permitting contraceptives for minors."

Heysler had 1,667 votes while his Republican opponent, Joseph Hauptmann, finished with 894 votes. Human Rights party candidate Dave Rathke had 649 in this East Lansing district.

Current commission chairman Democrat David Hollister, who will be a state representative in January, said that the new Democratic majority must face some important considerations before concerning itself with welfare programs.

"The Democrats must realize that all the elected county department heads are Republicans and are very powerful people," he said.

Hollister explained that it could greatly hinder the new board's effectiveness if the Democrats should alienate themselves from people such as the sheriff and judges.

He added that they should be aware of factions within their party. He said two splits, rural vs. urban and conservative vs. liberal, play a strong role in determining what the board can accomplish.

Kenneth Hope, Democratic winner in the 2nd District, said that county spending would be another consideration.

"When you have the majority, you also have the responsibility. There will be a greater burden on the Democrats to account for county spending," Hope said.

David Buhl, 16th District commissioner, added that some present programs would have to be seriously re-evaluated or dropped by the new board before they considered initiating any new programs.

Buhl also said he does not expect any major changes in board policy.

"I still think you'll have the same type of operation. I don't think those returning to office will give up their beliefs because of party differences," he said.

Most Democratic commissioners contacted said the board's present tight budget will prevent any excessive spending on their part.

Gordon Swix, Republican commissioner from the 13th District, who lost to Democrat Deborah Stabenow, said inexperience is one of the biggest problems for both Republicans and Democrats on the new board.

"I think there is only about five or six people on the new board who have a real sound background in county government experience," Swix said.

He said that cooperation among board members would alleviate the problem as new members would gradually gain the support and advice of the more experienced commissioners.

Although unhappy about the greater Democratic majority for next year, other Republican commissioners also said that cooperation would be the key to the board's effectiveness.

Republican John Bos, re-elected 14th District commissioner, said, "I don't really think there will be any party conflicts along partisan lines on the new board."

Marvin Lott, Republican winner in the 5th District, remarked, "There's going to be a lot of problems. We're just going to have to work together."

Frank Sudac, Republican victor in the 21st District, added, "As my father used to say, 'When you're the hammer, you pound. When you're the anvil, you bear.'" "The Republicans will definitely be in the minority. With only seven votes, we're not going to be a threat to anybody," he said.

Other election results for districts in the campus area were: 6th District, Democrat incumbent John Veenstra over Republican candidate Charles White, 1,726 to 1,649; 7th District, Democrat incumbent Pamela Stern over Anthony Peterson, 2,494 to 1,714; 9th District, Republican incumbent Derwood Boyd over Charles Massoglia, 2,131 to 2,055, and 19th District, Democrat incumbent Pat Ryan over Rachel Hammond, 1,977 to 945.

The Student Workers Union voted Sunday to investigate the Student Employment Advisory Committee to determine if that committee has the power and authority to take campuswide action regarding alleged intimidations and harassment of students for union activities.

Union spokespersons say the Student Workers Union is anxious that the committee process succeed. "However, if it is impossible to handle on campus" the union will then fill formal proceedings with MERC (Michigan Employment Relations Commission).

MERC is the state agency that investigates and adjudicates labor proceedings.

The union vote followed a Thursday meeting with University administrators Jack Breslin, executive vice president; C. Keith Groty, assistant vice president for personnel and employee relations, and Jack Shingleton, director of the Placement Bureau.

At that meeting, Doyle O'Connor, representing the Student Workers Union, and Bob Repas, professor of labor and industrial relations who acted as adviser, insisted that some action be taken by the University to insure that no future intimidations would occur. They also insisted that MSU take public action to remedy intimidations that have already allegedly occurred.

Allegations to date center on false and misleading statements made by various administrators.

The administration refused to do this. The administrators suggested that the student workers consider the possibility of going to the Student Employment Advisory Committee.

The committee is an advisory committee that functions as a communications link between four student representatives and four campus employer representatives. The committee is not a grievance procedure mechanism.

"We hope that the University committee system is capable of responding to these questions and we hope to handle these short of legal action, if possible," O'Connor said.

"We went to them (the University) with a reasonable request. We wanted a simple statement of the University policy, a University policy of noninterference with the unionizing drive. They (the University) put out a similar statement at the time when the CT's were preparing for an election."

The CT's are the Clerical-Technical

Workers, who represent about 2,200 clerical and laboratory technician workers on campus. At the time the CT's were preparing for their election, the University posted public statements of noninterference with organizing measures, even though there were no grievance suits pending in litigation.

"The Student Workers Union is concerned that many such grievances are going unreported," O'Connor said. "We strongly encourage any student workers who feel in any way harassed or intimidated to immediately contact the ASMSU office of Labor Relations in 312 Student Services Bldg."

"We have the machinery set up to discuss these things," Shingleton said. "I can assure you that it will be done. None of us can afford to play around. I am committed to a strong student employment program at MSU. This is in the best interests of the students and the University."

"We talked about many things," Breslin said. "We took the position that this University does not tolerate intimidation or harassment of any of our employees, either fulltime or students. We indicated that there was a mechanism that these matters (grievances) could be handled through very quickly."

"I think it's fine that the membership decided to go to the committee. It will be handled expeditiously, I am positive of that."

Area firms use Identiseal to cut bad-check passing

By RALPH FRAMMOLINO
State News Staff Writer

Not everyone being fingerprinted nowadays is a criminal.

Cashing a check is reason enough in a growing number of East Lansing and Lansing area businesses to ask for a thumbprint as positive identification. East Lansing banks are also using the system in opening new accounts.

"We hope to protect the people, primarily, and the businesses also," John W. Snively president of Identiseal of Michigan, said. The Identiseal company sells thumbprint sets and is also a check surveillance service, verifying bad checks against their files.

"The biggest advantage is that it cuts down the losses to businessmen," Gary Clark, secretary-treasurer of Identiseal of Lansing said. "It serves as a deterrent to the bad check passer."

When a merchant gets a bad check with the Identiseal thumbprint, he or she sends the check to the Michigan headquarters in Grand Haven where the check is photographed. The picture of the print is then cross-referenced against the company files and if the prints match with a previous offender's print the information is passed on to the police in that area. The check returns to the merchant.

Clark said that the person who intends to pass a bad check may think twice because the thumbprint will serve as positive identification.

"During the process of prosecution it is difficult to get positive identification," Clark said. He said that the thumbprint would be unequivocal proof that that person passed a bad check.

"The thumbprint also gives us an advantage to locate the criminal," he said.

Clark said the only prints on file, which number 500, are those of people who already have a history of passing bad checks and perpetrating fraud.

The Identiseal package includes a role of demographic paper larger than the size of a thumb. The paper has an adhesive backing which allows it to be affixed to a check. The customer then presses his or her thumb on a chemically treated section of the dispenser box and presses a thumbprint on the paper. Identiseal is only one of several companies which offer such a package.

The thumbprint system came out of an experiment in Texas during 1971 and 1972. Several nationwide companies have sprung up. Identiseal being one of them.

Both Snively and Clark deny that the thumbprint idea is close to the Big Brother concept, though the Identiseal organization works closely with the law enforcement agencies.

"As for infringing on privacy, it doesn't," Clark said. "We are not asking anymore than another signature actually. All it does is just back up a person's signature."

"There's four billion worth of bad checks passed every year," Snively said. "That comes out to $1,500 for every man, woman and child in the United States."

Snively also said that more businesses have gone bankrupt from bad checks than mismanagement.

Lt. George Hein, of the latent print identification unit of the Michigan State Police, said he thinks thumbprinting is a growing business.

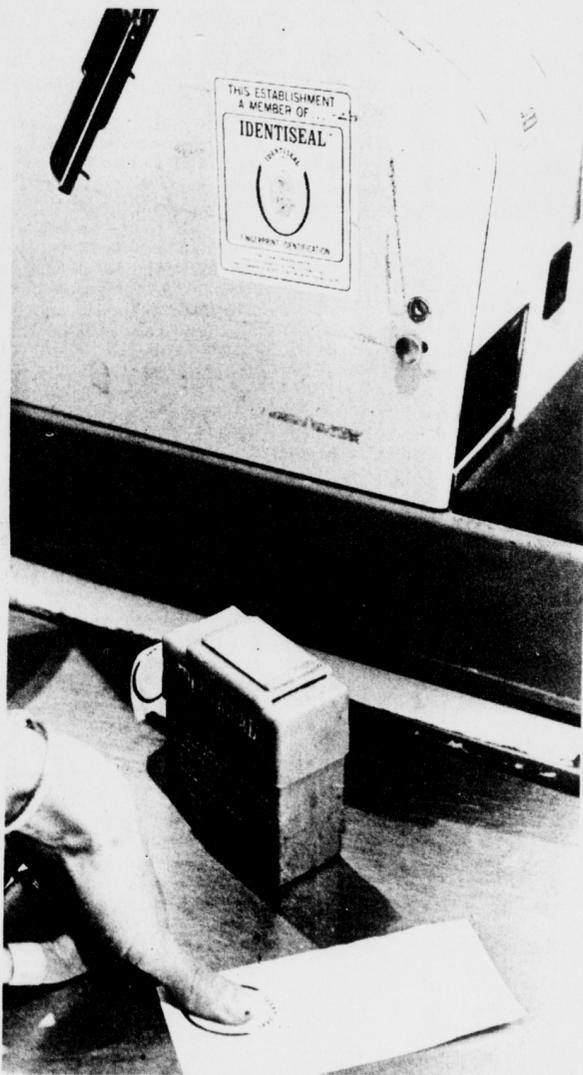

"We do quite a bit of work in that area," he said.

The legality of the entire process has yet to be formally ruled on by the attorney general of Michigan. Lt. Hein said there is nothing illegal about the idea of leaving a thumbprint on a check, because it is regarded as a private contract.

Snively said he could foresee a day when all a customer would have to do in order to charge merchandise is to leave a thumbprint and sign his or her name.

"There's a machine now being developed in California that can scan and check thumbprints," he said. Snively said the practical use of such a machine would still be far in the future.

More and more stores are using the Identiseal process, to prevent the passing of bad checks. People who use the security process take a small piece of demographic paper from the dispenser, press their thumb on a chemically treated portion of the box and leave a thumbprint on the paper.

Doctor says tight undies might affect male fertility

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — A woman doctor is investigating whether tight underpants affect a man's fertility, and says killed Scotsmen and unclad Africans may provide some clues.

Dr. Ann Chandley, 38, a genetics researcher at Edinburgh's Western General Hospital, told newsmen she has found that animals such as rabbits and gorillas produce sperm that is 98 per cent effective.

"But no man who has been tested has sperm that is more than 75 per cent perfect," she said. "It could be that tight underpants cause high temperatures in the testicles of civilized man and that brings about abnormalities."

"If a bull came up with a sample that was as defective as the average man's, he would be shot on the spot."

Dr. Chandley said she and her colleagues would conduct their research in a special tent which opened Thursday. They will compare the sperm count of men in varying degrees of undress, from those who wear tight underpants to kilt-wearing Scotsmen and unclad African tribesmen.

Sperm from the men will be sent to the hospital's cytogenetics unit for analysis to see how potent it is.

Other researchers report that hot baths tend to reduce a man's fertility, or count of sperm, while cold baths might be helpful in improving his fertility.

Some speculate that the testicles are outside the body in order to create a cooler environment for sperm than if the gonads producing sperm were inside the body.

The Scotch research project prompted an angry response from one of Britain's major underwear makers, Lyle and Scott.

"This is simply scare-mongering," a spokesman for the firm said. "One has only to examine the birth rate of this country. Y-front briefs seem to have done nothing to our young men."

Auto industry layoffs rise

DETROIT (UPI) — Auto industry layoffs soared past the 84,000 mark yesterday with the layoffs of 22,525 Chrysler workers and the United Auto Workers (UAW) union urged a strong government program to stave off a near-disaster economic situation.

Of the 84,000 workers idled, 62,000 have been laid off indefinitely.

"The auto industry is not in a recession," UAW Vice President Irving Bluestone said at a weekend news conference. "It's in a depression."

About 40,000 workers at General Motors Corp. plants are already on indefinite layoffs, with 8,400 idled at Ford Motor Co. and 17,800 at Chrysler Corp.

Facts show Ford should quit

If President Ford were a cruel man he could spoil the Democrats' triumphal hour by announcing his resignation at once. There is every sensible reason for him to do so. It would be good for the country, good for the government, good for Gerald Ford and good for the Republican party. In fact, it might very well be the salvation of the Republican party.

The political case for immediate resignation is so powerful that one wonders why delegations of the Republican faithful are not already at the White House urging Ford to pack and clear out.

The idea does not seem to have occurred to Ford, for his press secretary insists that he intends to persevere these next two years in pursuing the policies to which he is already committed. A sad decision, if true. It is as if the British Army, hunkered down at Dunkirk, had decided to fight it out with the Wehrmacht instead of taking the boat to Dover.

One can explain this suicidal inflexibility only through Ford's famous good fellowship. The Democrats want him there on the beach for the next two years, and he is not sportsman enough to deny them such a vulnerable target.

Well, surely his mind does not work this way, but there is the fact. The worst fate that could befall the Democrats in their moment of victory would be total victory, the awful discovery that they had won not only the infamous veto - proof Congress, but also the horror of the White House.

Under the rules, Ford's resignation would automatically place Democratic Speaker of the House Carl Albert in the presidency, thus placing responsibility for the government on the Democrats where the voters apparently want it.

It is inconceivable that the Democrats want it there just now. The two years coming do not promise much beyond hard times, heartaches and handouts, and in such times the people who take the blame are the people who occupy the White House, whether they deserve the blame or not.

If you are a democrat, how much sweeter to watch the public hostility roll up against a Republican President and anticipate the harvest of 1976 than to find your party abruptly made the target of a soured electorate.

In normal situations, it would be unjustifiable for a president to resign because his party had been whipped in off-year elections. The parliamentary system cannot be so easily adapted to the complex American political structure. Fortunately for Ford, however, he is not presiding in a normal situation and so need have no qualms about early retirement.

His is a government almost entirely without legitimacy. As for first appointed President, he has been elected by no one beyond his old congressional district in Grand Rapids. And now even this tiny constituency has voted Democratic in two successive elections.

His complete failure to help a Republican congressman, despite intense campaigning, gives him added justification for resigning on ground that he repudiated the policies for which he argued. Having been elected by nobles he was unable to persuade the electorate to vote for the candidates he backed.

Contemplating the future, he must more than ample justifications stepping out. He must now go back Congress swollen with the proof of its legitimacy and try to persuade it to accept Nelson Rockefeller, whose successor as governor of New York has just gone down in flames, as vice president of the United States.

Surely the Democrats will not pass opportunity to dramatize his weakness by pointing out that if Ford lacks legitimacy as president, his appointee for the presidency might quite sensibly be ignored. His Republican brethren may reasonably be expected to indulge in insolences, for their thoughts are certainly to be soured by the evidence of uselessness in the campaign just ended. The vision of the carnage to which they will be exposed in 1976 if he keeps them pinned down on the beach.

The case for resignation is overwhelming. The House speaker restores a small measure of legitimacy to the presidency since he is at least the elected champion of the majority party in the House of Representatives. Thus the principle of legitimate government is partly restored.

The Republican party, moreover, benefits by escaping from a hopeless exposed battlefield where it is with guns. The Democrats will be forced to deliver, instead of merely striking postures, and we will all be spared miserable years of waiting to see whether they amount to anything but bluster.

Seldom in politics do the national welfare and political advantage so happily coincide. Ford can become a statesman if he will bring himself to treat the Democrats as cruelly as they would treat him if the presidency were on the foot.

New trustees face test

The MSU Board of Trustees has been infused with some healthy new blood with the recent election of Democrats John Bruff and Raymond Krolikowski.

Bruff and Krolikowski will replace outgoing Republican trustees Kenneth Thompson and Frank Merriman, whose conservatism and lack of sensitivity to student concerns will not be missed.

The two new board members must be closely watched to ensure that they follow up on their campaign promises. Both demonstrated during the campaign a refreshing interest in keeping open the lines of communication between themselves and students. Hopefully this was not simply campaign rhetoric.

The secrecy of trustee meetings where financial matters are discussed has been a recurring controversy which should be raised, as promised, by the new trustees when their terms begin Jan. 1.

"If elected, I would work to see that private discussions do not occur," Bruff said before his Nov. 5 victory. That work is eagerly anticipated, since public business should not be handled in clandestine meetings, especially when the financial security of higher education is in jeopardy across the country.

Keeping an MSU education financially available to persons of moderate means will be a major problem for the trustees during these times of economic difficulty. Both Bruff and Krolikowski expressed concern for this issue during the campaign, and if that concern has remained after the election MSU students will have two new allies in their struggle to keep solvent.

There is considerable concern that Krolikowski has a glaring lack of knowledge about MSU and the current problems which it faces. He had never visited MSU before receiving the Democratic nomination.

Krolikowski must do some fast homework on the University if he is to be at all effective as a trustee.

The new board, with its former 4 - 4 party deadlock now a 6 - 2 Democratic majority, will be facing such concerns as restricted student participation in board meetings, the continued buying of non - United Farm Workers lettuce, limited student accessibility to University records concerning them, the problems of handicapped persons, improvement of the University affirmative action program and many new issues that are certain to come up.

It is hoped that Bruff and Krolikowski will help lead the new majority toward a more open - minded, open - doored board which is aware that a University is essentially for students.

'Moo U' woe

Pundits have long reveled in tagging the University "Moo U." Inasmuch as such a nickname indicates MSU students do - or did - have a greater understanding of and sympathy for the creatures man lives with, "Moo U - ers" have nothing to be ashamed of.

Therefore, "pranks" such as the kidnapping of a pregnant ewe from the MSU flock Saturday night are doubly abhorrent. Such senseless exploitation of an animal for a few minutes of hollow fun degrade all involved. Callous actions of this type must not be repeated, or the University's delicate balance between man and nature will be upset.

Marshall a nice relief

Many MSU graduate assistants strike out as teachers, and few win awards for their pitching prowess. However, Mike Marshall, MSU teacher, Ph.D. candidate and ace relief pitcher for the Los Angeles Dodgers, has proven that his arm is as good as his academic record.

Marshall recently won the baseball writers' Cy Young award as this year's outstanding pitcher in the National League. He is the first relief pitcher in the National League. He is the first relief pitcher ever to snare the coveted award, and MSU students and staff have a right to be proud of his accomplishment. The University of Michigan had Gerald Ford. Now MSU has gone at least one better with Marshall.

Marshall acquired his skills as a pitcher through long, hard years of work and study. He uses his mind as much as his body to control the flight of a baseball. As a teacher of neuromuscular relaxation at MSU, he has tried to instill in his students, including the Oakland Athletic's Herb Washington and Marshall's Dodger teammate Steve Garvey, these mind - over - body attitudes.

Marshall must be congratulated not only for his achievement as a baseball player, but also for his continuous efforts to change the narrow - minded image of a sports star.

"As an athlete, I am no one to be idolized. The fan should enjoy the high skill level of the performer and not build anymore into it than that," Marshall said.

"Fans should enjoy the quality of performance, not the result. Our whole society is deluged with the concept that winning is all that's important. That is bull. All that's important is that the individual do the best he can," he said.

Your head's in the right place, Mike.

Reporter fears 1984 looms

After reading Paul Smyth's letter about the "shoddy journalism" in my story on the English Language Center (ELC), I can only shake my head and fear "1984" is around the corner.

Most reporters expect a certain amount of "fan mail" whenever we do a controversial story. And it's good when people tell us they think a story is unjust, because it keeps us on our toes. In fact, the expectation of receiving criticism makes us try harder to make our controversial stories fair to both parties involved.

What troubles me, therefore, is not so much Smyth's comments about my reporting, but his implication that ELC is beyond criticism.

Since when isn't the quality of

This is the meaty type of material that there should be more of in campus newspapers, instead of the bland "cutiesie"

Rocky good in troubled times

NEW YORK - On the morning after the election, Nelson Rockefeller spent hours on the phone in his Manhattan office congratulating the winners and consoling the losers. Nothing seems to subdue or depress this man. All his party's troubles, all his family anxieties, all the opposition to his confirmation as vice president merely seem to have liberated his boundless supply of energy and optimism.

It is not that he is blind or indifferent to other potential difficulties ahead. In fact, he has a short list of impending dangers that could quickly make the economic prospect even grimmer than it now seems.

A coal strike this month, a strike of the oil, chemical and atomic workers next month, a 12 per cent shortage of natural gas in what promises to be a very cold winter, and the very real danger of another Middle East war, plus higher oil prices and even an oil boycott - any one of these, he thinks, could spin us into a major national crisis.

But it is typical of Rockefeller to anticipate these possible problems, not to deplore them but to act now to avoid them, and to be ready with a program to deal with them if they cannot be avoided.

His present frustration is that, pending confirmation by the House and Senate as vice president, he feels like a beached whale, eager to help President Ford in any way the President asks him to help, confident that the problems before the nation are soluble, even excited about presiding over the Senate - but unable to do anything until sworn into office. And meanwhile he is even wondering whether it would be all right if he accepted an invitation to the new governor's conference in Utah this weekend.

Rockefeller is not very interested in talking about the election. He has computerized the returns, and knows all the cards in the deck, but they are obviously not his favorite topic. He agrees, reluctantly, that maybe his hand - picked successor as governor of New York, Malcolm Wilson, might have done better if he had followed the progressive Republican line of the Dewey - Rockefeller years in Albany, but he avoids personal blame and puts the election results down to the accumulated frustrations of Vietnam, Watergate and the recession.

What really interests him is how we can get on to practical remedies for our energy crisis, and how to mobilize the scientific and engineering talents of the nation to make us more independent of energy resources abroad.

Rockefeller is in his sixties now. He has gone through all the political and ideological battles of the last generation, and seems to have concluded that the practical problems of life cannot be resolved by old party slogans or ideologies.

Since the beginning of this year, when he resigned the governorship of New York, he has been gathering together the best brains that Rockefeller money can buy to define the "critical choices" before America and the world. One of the members of this company is Gerald Ford, who sat in on these discussions of the coming age. The guess here is that this was an important, maybe even a decisive factor, in President Ford's selection of Rockefeller for vice president.

Since then, however, Ford and Rockefeller haven't been able to talk very much. The election, the personal medical problems of their families, and Rockefeller's confirmation difficulties have intervened. So Rockefeller sits here in his office on Fifty - fifth Street and waits for a call to Washington from chairman Howard Cannon in the Senate and chairman Peter Rodino in the House to decide whether he is going to be vice president or not.

Meanwhile, Rockefeller waits and concentrates, not on the pessimistic predictions about his party, his country, and the western world, but about his optimistic visions of the future. In his spare office behind his blind door on Fifty - fifth Street - the calculated austerity of the rich - he keeps talking and yearning for that national office that he has never quite able to achieve.

He has a cheap artist's easel or display stand next to a table for six or eight in his office. On it this week he has a triangle which is supposed to illustrate the dilemma of the energy crisis. The word

"cheap" is at the top of the triangle, what all people want. The word "secure" is at the bottom left of the triangle, the word "clean" is right bottom.

Rockefeller points to this chart at a triangular political dilemma. There well - organized and powerful forces what is cheap, secure and clean. The trouble, Rockefeller says, is that they all in conflict with each other. And we will never get them all together unless things get even worse than they are now.

So he waits on Fifty - fifth Street he muses. If only we could get scientists back in the government think about our possibilities instead of problems.

On food and hunger, how to get energy and how to govern - and the difference between the two - on his mistakes of past and his hopes for the future - talks through the telephone calls. He is almost always too happy to hear the too complimentary, too consoling, particularly too flattering.

But there is something very good at bottom of this well, for, unlike most of his age, he is thinking of the future gathering together the brains and vision of the coming years.

Ad criticized

The ad for the book "How to Succeed in College Without Really Trying" (Nov. 7, page 18) was disgusting. The fact that the State News printed this ad is reprehensible and patently irresponsible. Even with a minimally progressive social conscience, the State News should be seeking to promote education in its classic liberal sense, not counterproductive adolescent ripoff schemes.

I would be among the first to admit that the University exists mainly to serve the interests of corporate capital in America. Institutions like grades and required courses serve to discipline and stratify the potential labor force. But we must not let the process of surmounting the hassles and bureaucratic bullshit of higher education become an object in itself.

Instead of "psyching out" the system in order to "beat" it through juvenile and sexist games, the truly revolutionary solution (and maybe the liberal one, too) lies in understanding the system in order to change it or to subvert it. Education, for those who take it seriously, involves serious investigation and reflection. It is too bad that the State News has played into the hands of those who would prevent us from using our minds to change the world.

Pat Ashton
1519 G Spartan Village

Editor's note: State News advertising policy includes the refusal of ads on sexist or illegal grounds. The purchase of the book mentioned in the ad is a personal moral decision, and the State News does not wish to deny its readers their right to such decisions.

I would like to thank the State News on behalf of the students of MSU for running the advertisement "How To Succeed in College Without Really Trying." With sections such as "The Art of Plagiarism," "The Invisible Cheat - Sheet" and "007's Guide to Cheating in the Exam Room," this book is bound to relieve us of much of the drudgery of studying.

For a mere $10 it is now possible to learn the secrets of acquiring nothing from a $10,000 education. I understand that a follow up course is in the making, "How To Succeed In Life Without Really Trying." Sorry no money - back guarantee on that one.

I think the State News deserves praise for prostituting its ethics to the indigent students of this University.

Maneb M

Regarding the recent full - advertisement run in the State News 7 entitled "How to Succeed in College Without Really Trying," the State News has again displayed their lack of intelligence and incompetent journalistic discretion choosing to print an advertisement of questionable value and ethics. In a when moral vacuity is common among the branches of our government the State News continues to propagate type of moral ineptitude with little regard for the intelligence of its readers.

Election brings many trends into view

Random notes on the election results: Maybe 1976 will be the year when one of the major parties could profitably put a black or a woman on its national ticket. Both did well in congressional, state and local campaigns this year. Both have been doing well enough for some time now to provide a small stable of experienced office holders and proven vote-getters. Such an offbeat ticket would instantly lift the party sponsoring it out of the ruck of politics - as usual. Against a Ford - Rockefeller ticket, for example, the Democrats could do a lot worse than to run, say, Tom Bradley, the black mayor of Los Angeles, or Ella Grasso, the new governor of Connecticut, for vice president. The Democrats probably will do worse, too.

President Ford suddenly has a whole new gallery from which to choose new faces for his administration. A host of defeated Republicans, offering both dangers and opportunities, will be knocking at the door of the White House personnel office. Some, like Indianapolis Mayor Richard Lugar, a loser to Birch Bayh in a Senate race, or Houston Flournoy, the California controller who lost for that state's governorship, would bring a young and attractive air to the Ford Administration. But the danger is that Ford, clubby congressional type that he is and loyal friend to boot, might try to staff up with old buddies from the House who were sent home by the voters, mostly for good reason.

The long-established trend toward independent voting continued, with ticket-splitting visible all over the place and a card-carrying independent elected governor of Maine. New York, Maryland, Ohio, Nevada, Arizona, Iowa, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania and South Carolina all elected governors and senators of opposing parties.

At this rate, how long will it be before some daring presidential hopeful decides to shortcut the exhausting party nominating process, or refuses to accept its outcome, and runs as an independent? George Wallace showed it could be done in 1968, and such a gesture might strike the right chords in a public that seems little swayed by party labels and "voted for the man" - or the woman - it liked best.

As both sides have been quick to point out, the big new Democratic congressional majorities put the Democrats on the spot. They will have to share responsibility now for such matters as inflation and recession and the defense budget. They have virtually no policy-making machinery to help them develop a program, and probably lack the discipline and coherence to carry out a program if they had one.

OP-ED PAGE

The net gain in Democratic presidential candidates, in the steely-eyed analysis of the Great Mentioner, appears to be one. A ranking incumbent presidential candidate, Gov. John Gilligan of Ohio, was knocked out, but that loss was canceled by Hugh Carey, yesterday a Brooklyn Congressman, now automatically presidential timber as governor of New York. The net gain of one comes from Edmund G. Brown Jr., the new governor of California, and John Glenn, a landslide winner for an Ohio Senate seat. Both are untried and Brown is unaged, but each is worth a half-Mention in this age of desperation.

Mustang Bar bucks blase

Entertainment writer Frank Fox has watched the gradual drift of MSU bar patrons into the city of Lansing, as they took over Dagwoods, Maccs and Embs in their inebriated march to the center of the capital. Fox now envisions the culmination of this encroachment into the industrial wasteland.

If the East Lansing bar scene seems a little too tame and your idea of a fun time is getting kicked in the head by a wild horse, you might hazard an evening at Lansing's Mustang Bar.

You might, and then again you might not.

Where, one might reasonably ask, is the Mustang Bar?

It lies halfway between the Barbary Coast and the Bowery, a few doors down from the Bucket of Blood.

People will tell you that the Mustang Bar is the focal point of Lansing's crumbling "North End." That is so, but only because Lansing has no waterfront. If the city did, the Mustang would be there.

In reality, the Mustang is probably no worse, nor better than a few other choice spots in the back streets of capital city.

But the place has, well, a certain reputation. Its customers tend to be a bit colorful. Just a bit.

On certain nights the place looks like it is filled with refugees from the last Clint Eastwood spaghetti-western. The ones Eastwood didn't want to tangle with.

Indeed, the Mustang is right out of a dozen B-movies. It seems a place for secret meetings and conspiracy, a place to buy treasure maps and sell souls. A place for sightless pirates to give one another the Black Spot.

"Aaarrh, this is from Cap'n Flint," they would croak.

But reality is not so sweet.

It is Saturday night in the Mustang. Only a few bent-over characters lean against the bar. One is a philosopher without a philosophy. His companion is a toothless old man with grey-stubble whiskers who gurgles his approval or disapproval through spittle-soaked lips. "If you kills a man," the philosopher shouts, "I say if you kills a man, he go to the cemetery and you goes to the penitentiary. What have you gained?"

His companion drools and grunts in agreement.

"What have you gained?" the philosopher cries triumphantly, "you is both Jacked."

Sound advice. Beneath the philosopher's barstool, a vicious troll waits for an unsuspecting pilgrim. In the far corner, a ragged derelict chews on the yellowed stem of a suspicious round-bowled pipe. He looks altogether too much like Edgar Allen Poe.

Lord God, Billy Bob, it is Edgar Allen Poe. What kind of a place is this, anyway?

The wall behind Poe collapses under the onslaught of Pancho Villa and a score of syphilitic bandits who ride through on sway-backed burros laden with bound virgins and bags of gold.

The scene is too intense. Escape is imperative.

The only way out is through the men's room, but the door is blocked by the crumpled body of a Maltese sailor. Half of the poor lout's nose has been bitten off by one of the tree-slots that hang from the ceiling.

With his own blood, he writes a pathetic epitaph:

"Oh God, dear God
You went too far
When You stuck my ass
In the Mustang Bar."

WHY COMMIT YOURSELF TO THE PRIESTHOOD?

Why be a priest? Certainly, in times as difficult as these we live in, being a priest is a lot harder today than it was in years past.

And committing oneself to anything for any amount of time seems to be one of the conflicts of our modern age. But the priesthood is a challenge. A big one.

Today, more than ever before in history, men and women, young and old, are searching for religious meaning, for withdrawal from isolation and alienation to joyful community experiences, for Good News in the midst of discouragement and hope in the place of pessimism.

The Paulists are trying to minister to these needs. As a contemporary religious community serving the American people, our mission is to communicate the love of Christ to people.

Every Paulist is a missionary: in the pulpit or the parish house... on campus or in the inner city... with the spoken or the printed word... he is communicating to people. His mission is to all of America. His message is love: the love of Christ for all people.

It isn't easy but the Paulist welcomes commitment. Welcomes the challenge. If you are interested in the Paulist way of life, send for the Paulist Papers.

GM exec offers advice to students in liberal arts

By PETE DALY
State News Staff Writer
MSU students in liberal arts and social sciences should try to make themselves more of a salable product if they opt for a business career, a General Motors executive says.
L.B. Pryor, asst. general sales manager for G.M.'s Cadillac division, spent last week on campus as part of a program promoting contact between students, universities and business.
"Liberal arts or social science are both good packages, but they are lacking in some respects," he said.
Earlier in the interview he said students should make a decision concerning their future "based on realistic facts."

situation," Pryor said.
Pryor said an increasing number of college graduates — mostly in social science or liberal arts — are finding little or no employment in their field, and many turn to business for jobs.
"And if you just float into business (following graduation), you are apt to waste several years before finding a rewarding job," Pryor said.
Graduates that have never taken courses in accounting, business management or marketing usually have to work several years as clerks or secretaries when they finally find a job in a business firm, he said.
"By taking business courses, they can reduce that time through making themselves more salable to employers," Pryor said.

the openmindedness of MSU students, but also noticed the biases against business.
"Probably most of the students had a negative preconceived notion of businessmen," Pryor said.
Pryor wants people to realize how much business has done for America.
"It has done more for us than any other system," he said. "But I want liberal arts students to see the importance of being able to improve the system. And they can do it from within."

Milliken faces legislative battle

GOV. MILLIKEN

By WILLIAM J. HOLSTEIN
United Press International
Although the Democratic legislature and Gov. Milliken are now exchanging broad pledges of cooperation, they are already rolling up their sleeves for escalated partisan skirmishing.
Milliken has rarely been in a confrontation posture with the legislature during his six years as governor because the upper chamber has been controlled by Republicans.
The senate has served as a buffer between the Democrat-controlled House and the governor by diluting potentially embarrassing bills before they ever hit Milliken's desk. Few vetoes have been necessary.
But now that the Democrats have a solid 24-14 hold on the upper chamber and a 66-44 edge in the house, the battle lines are clearly drawn.

Milliken, understandably enthusiastic after his convincing victory over Democrat Sander M. Levin, says he is "excited about the challenge of working with a newly constituted legislature."
On some issues such as social matters and transportation, Milliken may get along better with the new legislature than he does with the current one. One of the often-heard wisecracks around the Capitol in recent years has been "Milliken gets along better with Democrats anyway."
But on economic matters and labor legislation, which are sure to dominate much of upcoming legislative action, the Democrats are sure to back Milliken into a corner.
House Speaker William A.

Ryan of Detroit, who has been able to strike a mutually beneficial working understanding with Milliken, is stepping aside, most likely to be replaced by House Democratic Floor Leader Bobby D. Crim of Davison.
"We'll get along with the governor as long as we have impact in programs and goals," Crim said. "We'll get along if we have impact and an imprint on any programs going through."
Floor leader Jerome T. Hart of Saginaw is beginning to flex his political muscle and promises to keep Milliken on his toes.

Beach Boys, Shankar create magic music

By JUNE DELANO
State News Reviewer

Hundreds of good albums released each year, but only a rare few offer the combination of composition and performance that can bring a noisy party to attentive silence and leave listeners in a nirvana. These albums, which may or may not feature outstanding musicianship, contain a selective magic that sets them apart from other undeniably good releases. Two records issued in September create this magic: the Beatles' "Sgt. Pepper" and the first Crosby, Stills & Nash album and Joni Mitchell's "Court and Spark."

"Shankar Family & Friends"
Ravi Shankar

The canyon between Eastern and Western culture has been bridged, not by Henry Kissinger, but by Ravi Shankar. The mentor of the 1960s flower children has come into his own with a stunning album that combines classical Indian music with western jazz and classical composition. "Shankar Family and Friends" is a long overdue album from a unique musician.

Shankar, introduced to America by the Beatles in their guru days, is a virtuoso sitarist who is equally recognized in classical and popular circles. But until this album, he was regarded as a peripheral diversion from mainstream Western music.

Now the master sitarist has gathered over 30 musicians, performing on over 30 instruments, for an opus called "Dream, Nightmare and Dawn: Music for a Ballet by Ravi Shankar" which takes up the entire second side of the record.

The musicians include members of Shankar's family, George Harrison (Hari Georgeson), Tom Scott, Billy Shears, Nicky Hopkins and Billy Preston. The sophisticated and exciting instrumentation offers a range from moog synthesizer to Boehm flute to exotic Indian instruments which are rarely heard in this country.

This epic composition, based on a myth-like story of love and lust, is engrossing and stimulating and ultimately approaches a religious experience. It is progressive, new music at its best, unhindered by the restraints of a rock and roll or classical genre.

"Smiley Smile" and "Friends" The Beach Boys

In 1967, before Brian Wilson lost his hearing and kept a giraffe in his backyard, the Beach Boys produced their finest album, "Smiley Smile."

But in 1967, the San Francisco sound and psychedelic rock dominated the music scene. L. A. surf bands were being replaced in the news by Haight-Ashbury hippies.

The beautiful album, probably the peak of Wilson's composing career, never won the recognition it deserved. There is no test like time, however, and the new Warner Brothers release of "Smiley Smile" (in a double package with "Friends" from 1969) will right the injustices of the past.

The common criticism of the Beach Boys is that they lack good instrumentals. The obvious reply is that their voices are their instruments and the guitars, drums and keyboards are almost incidental.

"Smiley Smile" is an album conceived for and built upon the Beach Boys' unmatched vocals. The compositions break the traditional surf sound and drift into complex and sophisticated musical structures.

If ever an album deserved a second chance, "Smiley Smile" does. Now seven years old, it is up - to - date, superbly produced and will be competitive in the contemporary music market.

Warner Brothers has rereleased the Beach Boys' albums "Smiley Smile" and "Friends." Originally released in 1967 and 1969, these albums were lost in the wave of new groups that entered the rock and roll market in the late 1960s.

Synagogue will exhibit Jewish art

A traveling exhibit of contemporary work by Jewish artists, including Marc Chagall and Ben Shahn, will appear briefly at an East Lansing synagogue Sunday afternoon.

Over 60 etchings, pen and ink drawings, watercolors and lithographs are part of a collection gathered by the Union of American Hebrew Congregations.

They will be displayed at the second annual Jewish Community Book Fair and Art Display from noon to 4:30 p.m. Sunday at Congregation Shaare Zedek, 1924 Coolidge Road.

There is no admission charge. The proceeds from the show will go to the Hillel Foundation Building Fund.

Chagall, a major painter of the 20th century, is represented in this exhibit by "Rabbi With Torah." Chagall, who now lives in France, is known as a master of symbolism.

Shahn, a great American artist and major influence in the contemporary art world, is represented by two wood engravings which were executed by Stefan Martin.

Prints and reproductions of many of the works in the exhibit are available at costs ranging from $10 upward.

Orchestra performance shows mix of best, worst

By ED ZDROJEWSKI
State News Reviewer

The quality of the performance at Fairchild Center Sunday by the MSU Symphony Orchestra showed variation. There was some of the best and some of the worst to be heard so far this season.

Conductor Dennis Burk did display anything more than usual style of conducting, emphasized the strings and a strict tempo. His reference for brilliant orchestral colors was evident throughout the concert.

He opened the concert with the short "Hungarian Rites" by Bela Bartok. His early works by the contemporary Hungarian composer are pleasant tones with a definite folk flavor.

Burk led the orchestra pianist to give a recital on campus tonight enthusiastically and they looked like they enjoyed playing the pieces. There were some intonation problems in the wind instruments, but on the whole it was an acceptable performance.

Pianist Edith Kraft made her debut with the orchestra playing Chopin's "Piano Concerto No. 1 in E Minor." Kraft is a new asst. professor of piano with the Music Dept.

Chopin wrote some of his most brilliant piano music in this work and Kraft certainly lived up to it. She has a sensitivity of touch that is quite rare in pianists. This gave the concerto a flavor that it does not often have. Many pianists play with bravado rather than with sensitivity. Kraft would probably make a recital of Debussy's piano music a memorable experience.

Unfortunately, the orchestra did not come anywhere close to the soloist. It was easy to tell when the orchestra had the melody because it could not be heard over the muddled noise. The entire group was badly out of tune, especially during the first movement.

Such a performance is inexcusable. Admittedly the Chopin work is overly long and poorly orchestrated, but it deserves better than what it got. Burk must have neglected this piece during rehearsal because it sounded like the orchestra was sight reading it.

Perhaps Burk gave the orchestra a "halftime pep talk" during the intermission because they returned to give the best performance of the season so far.

Listening to the Schostakovich "Symphony No. 9" was like listening to a completely different orchestra. The intonation problems miraculously disappeared and what ensued was an exciting performance. For once Burk let the brass blare out, adding to the excitement.

The music itself is hilarious. Schostakovich decided to flaunt the tradition of the "great ninth symphony." Instead, he created an "atrocity" in the style recently adopted by Peter Schickele in his PDQ Bach compositions. In the course of the five movements of the symphony, Schostakovich quoted at least two composers in a completely irreverent style.

The audience loudly applauded this last piece, in complete contrast to the first half of the concert.

Stolz enjoying big victory

By CHARLES JOHNSON
State News Sports Writer

Monday afternoon Spartan coach Denny Stolz was still savoring his team's 16-13 upset victory over the No. 1 ranked Ohio State Buckeyes Saturday at Spartan Stadium. "This win was great for our University," Stolz began. "It was great for our community, our people... in fact, it was great for the country." Stolz's high assessment of the significance of MSU's victory drew laughs from the press gathering assembled at his weekly luncheon. But somehow the impression came through that the second-year Spartan mentor really believed what he was saying. He had just watched his team chalk up the biggest victory of his coaching career and one of MSU's most historic athletic accomplishments. And Stolz was enjoying every minute of it.

"I've got a stack of game programs on my desk that people brought in this morning for me to sign," he said. "That's fantastic." "Our fans are much appreciated because they have great depth and bearing on the performance of our football team. You have to learn to win and that's what we were trying to do by asking the fans to wear green and white. It takes a joint effort by the fans, the press, the community... everybody," Stolz said. Though MSU came away from the victory in the national stature on the basis of its excellent performance, the Spartans physical stature did not escape scot-free. Three MSU players were injured in Saturday's game, with defensive end Rich Washington sustaining the most serious injury. Offensive tackle Ray Spencer and punter Tom Birney were the other banged up Spartans.

Washington suffered a dislocated vertebrae in his neck as a result of a hard collision with OSU safety Neil Colzie. The junior from Pontiac Northern High is currently hospitalized and only his family is allowed to visit him. Spencer sustained a knee injury and will be out of action for the remainder of the season. It is not known whether his injury will require surgery. Birney suffered a slight concussion after being hit on a punting attempt early in the first quarter. He will be fine for the rest of the campaign, but his game replacement, Dave Duda, did such a fine job against OSU that Birney may not see much action as MSU's punter. "Duda will be our punter," Stolz said of the Mt. Clemens sophomore. "He's been preparing himself for the two years he's been here and it showed." Stolz said that the Spartans knew that they could win the game against OSU and just went out there and exploited the things that the Buckeyes were susceptible to. "We knew that (Archie) Griffin would get his yards, but what we didn't want was for their darn quarterback (Cornelius Greene) to start running around," Stolz said. "We got better as the game went on." "When we went for the first down (in Spartan territory early in the game) with fourth down and one yard to go and made it, I think that set the tone for the whole game."

Clarification

Some people still maintain that the controversial "final play" Saturday began before time expired. In that case, the Spartan defense could have opted to have the illegal procedure penalty assessed. Or they could have declined, to end the game, because the touchdown would not have counted. A game can end with an infraction of the rules provided the offensive team is the guilty party.

All of the controversy surrounding the final moments of the MSU - Ohio State game Saturday would have been avoided had the referees ruled that MSU's Terry McClowry did indeed intercept this Cornelius Green pass. McClowry apparently picked off Green's pass on the first play of OSU's final drive, but it was ruled he dropped the ball when he rolled over.

Woody still fuming; he's upset with refs

COLUMBUS, OHIO (UPI) — Ohio State coach Woody Hayes, still fuming over his Buckeyes' controversial 16-13 loss to MSU last weekend, blasted game officials Monday for being "remiss" in their handling of the closing seconds of the contest. "You're not going to hear much from Woody Hayes today," Hayes, who refused to answer any questions concerning the game, said. He did criticize the officials, however, for allegedly letting Spartan players prevent the Buckeyes from getting off a final play as time was running out. "We did not get off but one play in the final 26 seconds," Hayes bristled. "In practice we can run four or five plays in that time. But in practice, we don't have people holding our players down. The officials were obviously remiss in not stopping the clock." Hayes said there would be "no appeal made to anyone" because "there can be none. The commissioner is even powerless to do anything."

Top rebounder Hairston named basketball captain

Lindsay Hairston, All-Big Ten center and the league's leading rebounder last season, has been named captain of the 1974-75 MSU basketball team by a vote of his teammates. Hairston, a 6-7, 186-pounder, led the league last season with 14.2 rebounds per game. He was also the eighth leading scorer with a 17.7 figure in loop games. His averages for all games were 13.6 rebounds and 16.5 points. His selection, announced Monday by head coach Gus Ganakas, made it a big weekend for products of Detroit Kettering High School. Fullback Levi Jackson and flanker Mike Jones, who scored touchdowns for MSU against Ohio State Saturday, are products of Kettering, as is Hairston. Ganakas also announced that the Old Timers Varsity basketball game for the benefit of the Varsity Club would be played at 7:30 p.m. Nov. 19.

George W. Fairweather, MSU professor of psychology and co-author of "Creating Change in Mental Health Organizations."

FEAR REDUCTION OF AUTHORITY Prof says officials resist change

By DENISE CRITTENDON
State News Staff Writer

Change is an inspiring force. It initiates new projects and spurs advancement.

But when it involves role changes, an MSU professor says it usually encounters strong resistance from individuals holding top posts.

George W. Fairweather, professor of psychology, said those at the top of the ladder tend to oppose change rather than advocate it when it comes to innovating new programs which may somewhat reduce their authority.

The results of a recent study conducted by Fairweather, based on implementing change in mental institutions, showed that the head officials in hospitals — doctors and administrators — resisted programs requiring role changes. It was found that persons holding lower positions were the only employees willing to attempt the new program.

The program, part of a national experiment conducted from 1963 to 1971, was geared to create other environments for mental patients undergoing chronic hospitalization. In the experiment, Fairweather and associates attempted to set up experimental societies called lodges. An alternative to hospitalization, the lodge is a dormitory housing a group of patients in a work and living situation.

Lower status employees

During the study Fairweather noticed that lower status employees were the only ones willing to cooperate with the incorporation of the lodges.

The hospitals persuaded to adopt the lodges were able to carry the plans through because employees holding lower positions were maintained as cohesive groups to implement the program, he said.

"In no instance was there ever a case where the top echelon actually helped establish a lodge," he said. In many cases, Fairweather explained, the same hospitals who supported the research of a lodge would not "absorb it into its staff." Roughly half of the hospitals confronted agreed to try the lodges, but failed to implement them.

15 adopt lodge

Out of the 255 mental hospitals contacted throughout the country, only 15 were persuaded to adopt the lodge.

Fairweather said the resistance to the lodges helped him to formulate the concept of social change.

"If you want someone to adopt something new, and if it fits into roles they already play, then change is easily accomplished," he said.

Many of the resisting hospitals were making use of traditional, non-role changing programs, Fairweather said, but "the lodge required that the professional people delegate most of their typical jobs to lodge members running the program."

Changed roles

"In usual mental hospital situations they played a dominant role in the supervising of patients but the lodge changed these roles to consultants," he said.

"The social change process is a very complex process and you need a number of factors operating at the same time. If you don't have those factors you are very likely not to get change," he added.

In order to successfully initiate change, a number of interrelated factors must exist, Fairweather asserted.

The program must consist of action other than words.

Involvement must be obtained from a number of people operating at varying levels of status.

A group interested in changing the organization in question must be located within that organization. There must be an out force of people also interested in change.

Fairweather's social change principle is defined in a recently published book, "Creating Change in Mental Health Organizations," co-authored by Fairweather and co-authors Louis G. Tomalia, MSU associate professor of psychology and of metropolitan studies and Dr. H. Sanders, former MSU associate professor of psychiatry and present director of research at Florida Health Institute in Tampa.

Arab investments in U.S. beneficial, ex-official says

By STEVEN M. WILSON

Investment in this country by the Arab oil-producing nations should not be feared by Americans, a former Federal Reserve System official told a group of economic and labor specialists at Kellogg Center Sunday night.

Andrew F. Brimmer, who recently resigned as a member of the Federal Reserve System's Board of Governors, was the keynote speaker at the opening session of a three-day conference on multinational industrial relations.

The fear Americans feel toward the Arab investments stem from unfounded suspicions that the Arab money would hurt the American job market, Brimmer said.

In his address Brimmer said the U.S. should welcome, not resist, the inflow of "petro-dollars" into this country.

"We shouldn't panic because the Arabs have a lot of money they want to invest in the United States," he said.

Due to the state of the oil industry, Brimmer said the Arab nations will continue to be money meccas in future years. Because of the great financial opportunities here, the U.S. should prepare to receive a sizable portion of these foreign oil profits through investments.

Brimmer said the oil-producing nations have increased their foreign investments by $35 billion over the past nine months. The U.S. received about one-quarter of that sum.

However, Brimmer said that the Arab money has flowed into the U.S. in the form of short-term investments.

"Very few petro-dollars have gone into bricks and mortar," he said. (Arab investors are investing little into construction of facilities.)

The oil-producing nations have refused to make any long standing direct investments in the U.S. because of the risks involved. Any commitments of this type would force them to become long-term money lenders, Brimmer said.

"The Arabs are not about to put their new-found riches in anything that would make them hostages to the U.S.," he said.

"Despite all of their money," Brimmer said, "these are still very poor nations." Brimmer also said the United States is not losing its edge in the world technological market, as most Americans fear.

"We have supported a system over the past half-century that overvalued the U.S. dollar and discouraged foreign countries from competing with us technologically," he said.

The recent re-evaluation of currency exchange rates, however, has enabled many foreign countries to compete with the United States.

Brimmer, a former assistant professor of Economics at MSU, addressed the more than 60 business, labor and government representatives participating in the conference.

Academic Senate to vote on SIRS

Nearly three years of debate and consideration over student access to Student Instructional Rating System (SIRS) results could come to a head tomorrow when the Academic Senate meets to vote on the issue.

The proposed policy to change SIRS — which would allow students a limited access to evaluation forms filled out by student on instructors — was passed by the Academic Council during spring term 1974.

Basically, the new policy would change the present one-level evaluation of instructors to two levels. On the first level there would be a University-wide form students would use to evaluate instructors. Every member of the teaching faculty would be required to utilize the form for at least one course each term.

On the second level the individual academic units would make up their own forms to evaluate their personnel according to the criteria of that department. Each instructor would be required to use this form for every course each term.

The main issue debated in the Academic Council was student access to the evaluation forms. Students on the council argued that these forms needed to be made available so that students could use them in selecting courses and professors.

Opponents of student access said that information included on the forms would be useless to students and could possibly violate laws on the privacy of employee records.

A compromise was finally reached where students would be allowed access to certain parts of the level two evaluations. The council interpreted the amendment providing access in such a way that "the individual unit may include information on level two forms that will not be made available to students but also shall include some information on level two forms that must be made available."

If the policy is approved tomorrow by the Academic Senate it will go back to Academic Council for drafting of the level-one form. If the Academic Senate goes down the proposal, it will go back to the council for further consideration.

The Academic Senate meets in Wilson Hall auditorium at 3 p.m.

Lectures, seminars and poetry scheduled for Berrigan visit

Daniel Berrigan, who became a national figure when he allegedly participated in the napalm burning of draft files at Catonsville, Maryland during the Vietnam conflict, will visit MSU Wednesday through Saturday.

Sponsored by the United Ministries in Higher Education Peace Center and other area groups, Berrigan will lecture, lead seminars and read some of his award-winning poetry.

His first scheduled appearance is at 8 p.m. Wednesday in parlors A, B and C of the Union, where he will read excerpts from his over 20 books of poetry and prose.

On Thursday at 8 p.m. Berrigan will lecture on his book, "America Is Hard to Find," at the St. John Student Center, 327 M.A.C. Ave.

A lecture on personal and community lifestyles is scheduled for Friday at 8 p.m. in the United Ministries in Higher Education located at 1118 S. Harrison Road. This will be followed up on Saturday by a seminar led by Berrigan on lifestyles from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Berrigan was arrested for the Catonsville draft burning and served 18 months in a federal prison. Since his release he has traveled to Hanoi, Washington and the Middle East to speak. He has been the recipient of the Lamont Poetry Award, the Frederick Melcher Award and the Thomas More Medal as well as being nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize.

There will be no admission charge for any of the scheduled talks and the general public is welcome. Donations for the Vietnam Veterans Memorial are being accepted.
