

Residence Hall Programs ees tripling rise fall term

By PAT NARDI State News Staff Writer

Residence Hall Programs (RHP) officials ounced Tuesday that this fall's overwding problem will significantly exceed fall's and that most freshmen will be ing in tripled rooms. While last year MSU had over 800 rassigned rooms, there may be up to this fall because sign up figures show increase of 800 in returning student ervations. There has not been an ease in the number of new students mitted for fall.

Normally about 9,500 students sign up during spring term to return to residence hall the following fall, said Gary North, RHP coordinator. Massive tripling was caused last year when about 10,800 signed up to return. This year 11,605 signed up. North said that the 1,600 triples figure is an inflated one. There will actually be less than 1,600 triples because at least 10 per cent of those who have housing reservasaid that about two-thirds of all new students will be placed in overcrowded

RHP is also warning returning students who do not have a roommate for fall that they will probably be tripled. "We don't want to underplay the problem" North said. "We don't want anyone to be surprised." RHP officials credit the faltering economy for keeping students in residence halls. They believe it is easier for students tions will either cancel them or simply not to remain in school than face the job show up in the fall. Nevertheless, North market, and maintain that living in residence halls is cheaper than living in most East Lansing apartments.

Though some people think MSU should build a new residence hall to end the tripling problem, North said the University will not consider it. Enrollment in universities is projected to significantly decline in the early 1980s. Besides, he said, the cost of construction and borrowing money for the building would be prohibitive. Since tripling is usually relieved after a term or so, North believes this University would have trouble keeping the new hall full of occupants and therefore would not be able to make its payments. Residence halls are completely maintained and operated by students' room and board dollars.

Those in triples will receive a $50 rebate each term.

One change for 1975-76 will be to permit students to voluntarily remain in triples, at the reduced rate, even though there may be space available in a regular double room in the area.

In order to help alleviate the overcrowding, RHP is continuing the sophomore waiver policy for fall. Under this waiver sophomores, who are normally required to live in University housing, will be permitted to live off campus. Last year over 2,100 requested these waivers, and of those, about 450 actually cancelled their residence hall reservation and moved off campus. So far this year, only 537 have requested the waiver - less than RHP officials hoped. Students still have until school begins in the fall to request the waiver.

Robert Underwood, RHP manager, said spaces may be available in married housing apartments to help alleviate tripling next fall, but that it is too early to tell with any certainty. In December, 120 women moved from residence hall triples to 50 vacant

§1-per-barrel import tax on oil ordered by Ford

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Ford Tuesday night ordered second $1-a-barrel tariff placed on imported oil in a move petted to cost consumers more at the gasoline pumps just as the mmer vacation season is starting. Declaring that Congress had "done nothing" on energy islation, Ford told a national radio-television audience in pared remarks that the new tariff will be effective June 1. le also said he will submit to Congress next month a plan to signed to increase prices and revenues to producers in hopes of uring them to increase production and seek new sources of oil. Ford was clearly impatient with Congress' inaction in his

The President referred to a comprehensive energy program he submitted to Congress Jan. 15.

The House has postponed action until after it returns from the Memorial Day recess on a bill designed as a substitute for Ford's oil import control proposals. Ford had said he would go ahead with the tax imposition unless Congress acted on a substitute this month.

Ford's energy program is based on the theory that higher costs we price controls gradually from domestic crude oil, a move will reduce consumption and that price decontrol on domestic oil will encourage more production.

"My program was designed to conserve the energy we now have, while at the same time speeding up development and will not stand here idly while the United States of America yout of gas," the President stated. "The Congress cannot drift, de and debate forever with America's future."

pealing to his audience, he said, "I need your help to energize longress into comprehensive action," he said. "I will continue ress for my January program — which is still the only total production of new domestic energy," Ford said.

"Though this would increase the cost of energy until new supplies were fully tapped, those dollars would remain in this country and would be returned to our own economy through tax cuts and rebates," the President stated. Ford said that in 10 years, "If we do nothing, we will be importing more than half our oil, at prices fixed by others - if they choose to sell to us at all."

McCollough said. He described the bill as an would be given broad powers to get the important priority for both the Republicans and Democrats. "We're saying to all society, 'join together and protect yourselves against crime,' " he said.

McCollough said that his bill calls for at least an initial $200,000 to set up the program, but that this is minimal considering the amount of money the legislature is free to work with. He pointed out that of the $6 billion that goes through legislative channels each year, the spending of $3.2 billion is left entirely to the discretion of the representatives and senators.

The basic structure of McCollough's program, detailing a crime victim compensation board and requisites for monetary relief resembles successful programs in the other states.

"I relied on my research quite heavily," McCollough said.

McCollough's bill calls for a crime victims compensation board of three people, all of whom must have been attorneys for at least five years. These individuals would be appointed by the governor and approved by the legislature. Other stipulations state that not more than two board members may be from the same political party and that after the program is set up, these commissioners would serve for terms of three

Room, board

Though the board of trustees will not rule on next fall's proposed room and board hike until late in June, Residence Hall Programs (RHP) officials are advising students to plan on an increase in the range of $100 for the year, or about $33 more per term.

MSU now charges $1,245 yearly for room and board. The proposed increase would call for a rate of about $1,345.

The increase is being sought to cover the increased cost of energy, food, labor and inflation in general. Inflation is reported to have risen 12.2 per cent in 1974.

Robert Underwood, manager of RHP, said even with the increase in room and board, MSU will still be cheaper than many Big Ten schools. MSU's present rate is also the second lowest in the state. Grand Valley College has the lowest room and board with $1,239 and University of Michigan has the highest with $1,401.

Officials try to clear conflict on renovation

By DENNIS BROWN

AND CHRISTOPHER TANNER Government officials moved Tuesday to clear up an apparent conflict over who is in charge of remodeling projects for the legislative wings of the state Capitol. The control of remodeling at the Capitol is important because the State Building Commission has expressed concern that recent remodeling projects have not been "economically feasible." The commission is attempting to look out for the long-term interests of Lansng and the Capitol and state complex.

The legislature, acting under more immediate, interest has sidestepped the Bureau of Facilities (formerly the Building Engineering and Management Division) and in the case of issuing cost-plus con-tracts for more than $20,000, clearly violated the law.

By law, the State Building Commission is set up as an approving and advisory board for the Bureau of Facilities, which is responsible for the hiring of architects and the supervision of Capitol remodeling.

In practice, these duties have been taken on by the Senate and the House of Representative directly.

A representative of the Management and Budget Dept. — which oversees the Facilities Bureau — said Tuesday that two laws were being violated. The law concerning who is responsible for supervising the remodeling projects and the law against giving out cost-plus contracts.

Tuesday, the State Building Commission took formal action to clarify its legal authority. "I don't like being just a rubber stamp of post approval," said Lansing Mayor Gerald Graves, an ex-officio member of the commission. "We asked twice in recent years to reorganize or abolish, or at least to have them (government officials) listen to us.

The commission's resolution called for "a letter to be written to the governor, lieutenant governor, speaker of the House, attorney general and chairmen of the House and Senate committees inviting them to a meeting to discuss establishing some authority for this commission or abolishing the commission."

"The commission has been used as sort of a gadfly advisory board whose recommendations are mainly considered for building plans that are politically unpopular," said H. Perry Driggs, a commission member.

In the past when these conflicts have come up, they have been settled by mediation between the executive and the legislative branches.

Bobby Crim, D-Davison and speaker of the House, is concerned about the situation and is looking into the matter in full detail, according to Curtis Hanes, Crim's press secretary.

The conflict over who is in charge of the remodeling projects was first brought to light in a Tuesday State News article concerning a possible conflict of interest by architect Donald H. Dunbar of Monroe, a member of the State Building Commission for the past four years. This alleged conflict of interest was negated because the commission does not function in the manner in which it is set up by law.

About 300 farm union supporters demonstrated at the El Texano Ranch near Hidalgo, Tex., today, jeering and taunting the man accused of shooting 11 people on Monday. Shouting "Viva La Huelga" and "Viva Chavez," the demonstrators, accompanied by United Farm Workers organizers, marched from a border bridge to the ranch's main house. They were watched by a half-dozen deputies. The group stopped across the road from the house and shouted insults about C. L. Neither Miller nor ranch owner Bill Pate appeared and the marchers returned to the Rio Grande bridge, across which many of the Mexican laborers come each day to pick melons in this area

U.S. policy switch announced

Henry A. Kissinger veered from previous U.S. policy Tuesday by going along with the developing world's insistence that raw materials besides oil be included in a conference between producing and consuming nations.

The United States previously held that the conference should deal with energy alone, and a preparatory meeting here broke down in March over the disagreement. Algeria led the move to include all raw materials.

The secretary of state made his compromise gesture in a speech in Paris before the 18-nation International Energy Assn. (IEA), which was formed after the Arab oil embargo of 1973 to include the major non-Communist consumers with the exception of France.

Though Kissinger modified the American position, he nonetheless maintained a relatively hard line on oil questions, stressing consumer nation solidarity and calling the oil producers a cartel with "exclusive and arbitrary control over prices."

Students occupying the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) mission here agreed Tuesday to leave the compound where three Americans have been holding out for almost a week, U.S. Charge d'Affaires Christian A. Chapman said.

Crisis eases in Lebanon

Lebanon's government crisis eased Tuesday as President Suleiman Franjieh consulted political leaders on the appointment of a new premier suitable to the country's Moslems.

After a week of street fighting, in which 70 persons were reported killed and nearly 200 wounded, the violence dwindled Tuesday to a few shots by snipers.

Palestinian guerillas in their camps and right-wing Christian nationalists of the Phalangist party, who have been battling each other since last month, remained on the alert behind sandbag emplacements in their neighborhoods.

The city council has only one glaring problem, said Lee Brodrick. "They don't have a voice for the smaller people, the working people," he said. "It's about time that we get some ifferent faces on that council," he added. Brodrick said he was tired of seeing the ity run by people who know nothing about he real citizens of East Lansing.

One manifestation of this problem shows p in the area of millages and property axes. Brodrick said that students, who do t have to worry about paying for millage creases or directly paying property taxes. re the ones that traditionally pass those Brodrick also said that he is concerned ith the condition of some of the smaller ndlords in the city, who only own one or no houses, and are having financial fficulties.

He added that, in his discussions with tizens so far, he has received a good deal positive response to his ideas. Brodrick has worked for married housing r 16 years, and has served on the recutive board of Local 1585, of the merican Federation of State, County and unicipal Employes.

about various council matters. None of the present council members hold such office hours, he said.

In fact, Czarnecki said the entire governmental structure of the city should be revamped, beyond the changes in the council attitude in making themselves available to the public.

"We have a government structure based on the 1920s," Czarnecki said. "The government structure has to be reshaped."

He said he was happy with the changes made recently by the council to streamline the commission system within the city government, but that other changes, like improvement of the staff information available to the commissions, must also be

As a member of the city Planning Commission, Czarnecki said he has also seen chances for possible improvement in the area of planning.

One of the things the city does not do well enough currently, he said, is keeping an eye on what is happening elsewhere around the city. Housing changes, road restructuring, and population shifts in neighboring areas can have a substantial affect on East Lansing, he said.

Czarnecki said the city should push for a representative on the Tri-County Planning Commission, and develop communication lines between itself and Lansing, Meridian Township, and other surrounding areas.

the border role the road now plays.

That role is typical of the lack of meaningful ties between MSU and the city, which Griffiths said he would also like to change.

"I am very unhappy with the lack of communication of any kind between the University and the city," he said.

Griffiths complained that the city does not know what the current University policy is on housing - and that causes problems in planning for the influx of additional students seeking temporary homes within the city borders.

"I am in favor of re-examining the apparent policy (of MSU) not to build any more dorms," Griffiths said.

"If the University doesn't want to get into dorm building, then maybe the city should," he added.

The city council and the board of trustees do sit down every once in awhile and have a luncheon, but these are no more than superficial, nonproductive social affairs, Griffiths said.

Once, after Griffiths took a day off from his teaching job at a Lansing junior high school to attend one of the luncheons, the council members had to wait for two hours before MSU officials showed up.

"I was damned insulted," Griffiths said.

He added that he will continue to push for more communication between MSU and the city to solve the housing problem, even if it means that the city will have to get into the housing industry.

two at-large, five-ward representative

Nall said everybody - students and citizens alike - would be represented better in a ward system. The problems one person has trying to satisfy the needs of numerous interests, inherent in an at-large system, are easily recognizable during campaigning, Nall said.

"If I were in a ward system, I would have a homogenous group to work with," she said.

Nall emphasized that non-student citizens were also "not afraid" of a ward system.

On social services, such as the Drug Education Center and Listening Ear, Nall said she strongly advocates any actions the city takes in this direction.

"I think we should push harder on these things and use some imagination," Nall said.

"I think we should take positive action." Nall said she wished to pay particular attention to the social needs of the currently ignored elderly.

For the housing problems, Nall recommends a rent control program of rolling back the current housing rates to the 1973 level, and forming a rent control board to administer the program.

"The board will only work as well as the people make it work. This will be a tool," she said.

The housing problems - which all stem from shortage - can also be resolved to a degree by city-guaranteed mortages to co-op groups, and the establishment of a city housing authority, to get the city

Neither have lived up to that commitment.

"The present council is not sensitive to the fact that the vacancy level is below the crisis level," he said.

"And the University could easily ante up land if it has a minimal concern for housing."

Owen advocates a joint venture between MSU and the city, with the University donating the land for town houses or apartments and the city financing their contruction.

He added that an additional advantage of publicly owned and operated housing is the practical experience it provides for the city.

"If you have (first-hand) information, then you can judge whether private housing is fairly priced," he said.

"It is a very complicated problem," Owen summarized. "But I think it can be solved by getting more housing."

The transporation issue is another complicated matter that involves several interests and groups, but centers on one main problem.

"It's just damned dangerous to cross Grand River Avenue," Owen said.

He said one improvement could come in the area of bus services. Currently, the Capital Area Transportation Authority (CATA) serves only off-campus areas, leaving those coming to MSU from East Lansing stranded on Grand River Avenue. The things to avoid when trying to solve the problem are the things that the Mike Stein would like to see less city and more citizen.

Stein

Stein, an economics major in Justin Morrill College, said that the city government inferes too much with the affairs of the individual. And that interference shows up the most in housing and construction laws. Stein said the council has only begun to recognize the housing problem and the influence it can have on that problem recently, with the proposals to slacken the housing code. "I think it is a step in the right direction. I don't think it's going far enough," Stein said. Stein advocates reducing the housing code restrictions to the lower state standards, thus creating more space for additional renters.

"In the long run, housing codes hurt because they restrict the supply of housing. I would leave it to the renters to decide what kind of quality housing they would like," he said

He also sees the establishment of communication between MSU and the city, which currently is sorely deficient, as a primary step in resolving the housing shortage.

"The University has been contributing to the housing problem. They've increased enrollment, but are cutting out the Fee apartments," he said.

Stein said he is not exactly sure who in the city should be talking to whom in the University about the housing problem, but there is a definite need for the communication.

"It does no good to have the University alienated from the city. They should be able to work together and both profit." he said. The council candidate does not, however, see a city housing authority as a possible solution to the housing shortage.

"I agree with Mary Sharp, who said the city should not be in the landlord business," he said.

Another major area of government interference in the rights of individuals, and in this case, neighborhoods, is city construction projects, Stein said. "The city keeps proposing construction projects of dubious value such as the Michigan-Harrison project," he said. "They don't consider all the effects of the projects all the time." Stein also feels that the city need not delve into the social service areas, such as the Drug Education Center and Listening Ear, unless absolutely necessary. "Ideally, private citizens should fund social services," he said. In addition, Stein was one of several people who was not satisfied with the way the city budget was broken down. Nobody knew whether the money was going to be used efficiently, he said. "We cannot afford to waste taxpayer's money," Stein said. One of the other problems Stein faces in his campaign, he said, is winning back the people's respect for a student candidate. 'Student candidates have caused problems in the credibility of student candidates. I have to win back people's respect for students in politics," Stein said.

dead, but hidden in the cobweb of affairs involving the state highway department, the city, MSU, Grand River Avenue, medians, potholes and widenings. "The highway department hates the city council because they made all the plans for the highway and the council said no," Griffiths said. So the potholes on Grand River Avenue remain, and the curbs are still "atrocious," while Oakland Avenue, just beyond the East Lansing border, has been repaved by the highway department, he said.

"Everytime it rains out there (on Grand River Avenue), it's dangerous," Griffiths added.

Griffiths wants to resurface Grand River Avenue, but the highway department has plans to widen the road to 11-foot lanes. Any shortening of the medians, though, would hinder the city's plans to replant trees along the road, Griffiths said.

But since Grand River Avenue belongs to the state, the city council will have to continue to grapple with the highway department to nix any unwanted plans, while avoiding any temping trade of a cross-campus highway for control of Grand River Avenue, Griffiths said. He added that he would like to see the

Nall said it is especially important for the city to concern itself with the problems of groups with special difficulties the elderly, the handicapped, gays and minorities - and groups with special intersts, such as neighborhood organizations. Nall added that one way of obtaining greater representation for all of these groups is by incorporating a ward system into the city council - where specific geographical areas of the city would have its own representative. The HRP is currently circulating peti-

Larry Owen sees one similarity between the city and MSU - both have victimized citizens in the area of housing

Avenue Owen also said that the city had a good bike path system planned at one time, and he regretted the fact that the plan had never become a reality. He also said he was disappointed to see that the city eliminated the number of people involved in commissions, to streamline the commission system. "It's more important to keep more people involved," Owen said.

"Commissions are a handy device for getting people involved in government," he added.

Getting people involved in government can help reduce occurrences like the cable television rate increase, Owen said.

"The procedure that was used to okay those increases was outrageous," he said. The Cable Communications Commission advised no more than a 20 per cent increase in the rates, but twice that much was granted by the council. Owen said the hearings on the matter could have been a lot more fair.

Tuesday's Academic Council meeting opened like any other: meil members clustered around the refreshment table ing and munching. The only difference between this ung and any was that this was the final meeting the academic year.

"Last year, an ad hoc committee passed a report recommending that another ad hoc committee be formed to study this," he said. "But so far, we don't have much as yet in the way of a solution.'

The Council also approved thematic programs for women and Jewish undergraduate studies.

A thematic program concentrates study on a field of interest, such as women of Jewish history, using courses chosen from two or three different disciplines.

"The program is merely a way of indicating on a transcript those courses relating to a theme," said Dorothy Arata, assistant provost. "It relates to a theme and not a major." Council members then approved the proposed Faculty Grievance Procedure, as amended by the Faculty Council May 13. but defeated an amendment to the document in a 55 to 20 vote.

In general, the proposed amendment, introduced by Jack Stieber, professor of economics, Grievance Officers and the parties involved in the grievance should both be present at the grievance hearing. As it stands now, however, grievance officers may meet and decide on a grievance in the absence of the involved parties. The proposed Faculty Grievance Procedure will now go to the Academic Senate.

Federal Judge Edward Benson of Grand Rapids has sent a Friday deadling for the nation's 10th largest truck manufacturer to come up with financial backing or else be declared bankrupt.

Negotiators were meeting in Detroit to discuss a proposal for financial backing of Interest in the firm also has been expressed by Kockum's, a Swedish shipbuilding company, which sent engineers to Lansing to study the feasibility of such a move.

Protests to SN

The State News has consistently ignored protests against sexist comic strips that daily rely on degrading and worn - out stereotypes of women as silly, disorganized, male - hunting morons for their feeble attempts at humor. I hope June Delano's recent column denouncing the sexism of the "Campus Clatter" cartoon will lead to its removal.

A previous protest, our letter against blatantly and offensively sexist cartoons and "Campus Clatter" in particular, failed. Our letter, which had 129 signatures (not 114, as Delano stated), was never printed in the State News. Instead, it was turned over to General Manager Gerald Coy. Coy chose to reply privately to our "purported" petition (as he phrased it).

Coy, in an illogical and vindictive letter, termed our expression of our opinion an other music, their rights are being attempt to "coerce the right of the press to print what it believes to be acceptable, informative, enlightening, etc., for all of its readers." Our letter (which I do not consider coercion of the free press) should have made it clear that these cartoons are not acceptable to all State News readers. And I challenge Coy to define how "Campus Clatter" and its revolting stereotyping could possibly be informative or enlightening to anyone. I wonder how funny cartoons repeatedly slurring other minority groups would be?

A new idea

I realize there has been much antagonism directed by many women of MSU towards the inclusion of Larry Lewis' "Campus Clatter" comics in the State News. Ah, but you know women - they get all flustered and upset when they're portrayed as ignorant, intellectually sterile, emptyheaded, mindless things whose existence and significance lie solely in their physical "endowments" as Larry Lewis and Playtex would seem fit.

I also realize that this comic strip brings in revenue from advertisers sponsorship, and withdrawal of this support would obviously deplete handy resource for the State News. But I do have a solution: being

I am, what I propose is to replace "Campus Clatter" with another comic! And, fortuitously. I just happen to have some scathingly brilliant ideas for this replacement strip. This would maintain financial revenues from sponsorship and simultaneously appease those uppity women. And, furthermore, I promise my comic creations to be at as high a level of hilarity, class and import as the one I propose to eliminate.

One of my creations involves the antics of a black Southern Baptist preacher who tap dances before his congregation while delivering his sermons and runs an underground watermelon racket. You can imagine what comical situations evolve as such, especially from one episode I have planned wherein the preacher finds himself accidentally placed in a medical school and - well, I don't want to give the story away. But if this isn't topical enough, I have another idea concerning this woman detective who investigates crimes in the Vietnam-refugee ghetto of Los Angeles. She herself is a slanty-eyed, yellow - well, you know what they all look like. Anyhow, her name is Sherlock Gook, and she spells trouble in her rickshaw on the Los Angeles highways!

And for the Jews - a game show -"Such a Deal." I admit it's very similar to a show currently on the air, but in my variety, all the contestants, of bonafide Jewish stock, must come dressed as poor

The prime conviction under which I live would not normally allow me to speak out. However, I feel now that my freedom is becoming too restricted; I am getting pissed off. I have decided to use an article, written by June Delano, as my example. This is taken from the May 22 issue

My first objection is the false sense of authority Delano assumes. In one paragraph, she speaks of a petition signed by '114 women protesting the comic page" and ends two paragraphs later with a plea to the reader to help her and the "thousands of women on this campus in a final effort to rid the paper's pages of a sexist cartoon ... " How she got from 114 to thousands is beyond me, but from what she said, her authority seems to come from the fact that

Iranians in U.S.

On Wednesday, May 21, I was appalled to see the demonstration put on by the Iranian students here at MSU. From the letter in Wednesday's State News and the caption by the picture in Thursday's paper, I get the impression the Iranians feel the United States is to blame for the "situation" in Iran.

Such statements as "Iran is the next. Vietnam" and "the just struggle of the Indochinese people led in part to the defeat of U.S. imperialism" have led me to this conclusion. If this is truly the way the Iranian students feel about the government (who allowed them to come to this country and further their education) I don't see why they stay; they should go elsewhere where they won't be under such "imperialism."

If their claims were true, the dissenting Iranian students would be immediately deported, but of course they won't be because this is free America. I hope the Iranian students of MSU will re-evaluate their position and think twice before they again bite the hand that feeds them.

Council fails ed eaucation

By EVA MARIKOVA

No institution questions itself. Once it comes into existence for a certain purpose it is not unlikely to lose sight of it. My year at the Academic Council leads me to believe that it, too, fell into the same trap.

The Academic Council operates like the student who is behind in all of his courses and who decides to catch up in the one where he is the most behind. Similarly, the Academic Council predominantly deals with issues that are brought to it on account of its critical condition. Ideally, of course, it should clarify its own priorities and then move down the list to solve them.

The Educational Policies Committee (EPC), a standing committee of the Academic Council where I also spent a year, has fared quite well within its educational policies discrepancy. Given the necessity of administrative decisions, it has tried to solve them with a view to educational demands. But even this committee has a hard time deciding what to do with the following item: "In the fall of 1974, 44.7 per cent of entering freshmen were deficient in one or more of the three areas of testing, English, arithmetic and algebra." (subcommittee report.)

MSU prides itself on being the second largest university in the United States. But EPC shouldn't take such things seriously. Even this reasonable committee, however. is a little hesitant to admit that the quality of student is more important than their quantity.

The committee is also concerned with funds which are reduced when enrollment goes down. Thus, no one may seriously suggest that we admit fewer students. I hope that it is clear that any university that reasons this way is a victim of economic consideration instead of being concerned with educational ones.

The 45 per cent figure is solvable only when we ask about the purpose of education. But the present structure is unlikely to do so. It is as if we expected our senators to raise questions about the purpose of a state in general and the United States in particular instead of quibbling about the size of farm subsidies. But it might just happen that the answer to the first question will reveal an answer to the second one: perhaps there should be .no farm subsidies at all.

The Doctor's Bag

My question concerns the uvula and whether it can be removed. For about the past year or so I have noticed that my throat becomes sore in this area if I talk too much or drink soft drinks or beer. The piece of tissue seems to lie on the back of my tongue at all times and is easily aggravated. Words like "file" become difficult to pronounce. My tonsils are still with me and I do not smoke.

Though unusual, some people have long uvulas which can produce irritation. generally of the tongue. Pronunciation of certain words would become more difficult as involuntary guarding against moving the tongue in an irritating fashion would occur. The uvula does have some function in terms of aiding swallowing, being part of the structures of the mouth along which the tongue pushes the food backwards.

The ear, nose and throat specialist whom I consulted assured me that the remedy to the problem is rather simple. A small amount of the uvula can be removed under local anesthesia (he used the word amputated, I half expected it to be circumcised). The procedure takes only a few moments and the tissue is removed from beneath and behind the uvula so that the front surface is not left raw and scarred, which would interfere with swallowing. No stitches are necessary, nor are any bandages, since the tissue in that area heals extremely rapidly.

A bowl of chili, a banana, a portion of peanuts or peanut butter or two or three cups of coffee - these things all make me sick. Three or four hours after consuming one of the above I will get a stomach ache and might even have diarrhea the next day. What do these things have in common?

Riddles, riddles, riddles. I am not sure that they have any one thing in common, but from your description, you have a somewhat sensitive gut. Since the stomach ache occurs three to four hours after you eat, it sounds much more as if it involves spasms or gas pains beginning in the small intestine or large intestine. The caffeine in coffee certainly can produce cramping and diarrhea in vulnerable people as can the spices in a bowl of chili. Bananas and peanuts are pretty bland stuff but you might have an idiosyncratic reaction to them.

There are no minimal daily requirements for any of the food stuffs you describe, so you would probably be better off avoiding them. That's too bad since a highly nutritious and tasty sandwich can be made from lightly toasted bread, margarine, peanut butter and sliced bananas

After doing an extremely large load of dishes I find that my fingers become prune-like in appearance, this also happens to my toes after extensive bathing. I was wondering what the causes are of this phenomenon. It seems to be temporary as they puff back out over

I received this letter in January 1975. Since that time I have been through a number of books, have talked with a dermatologist, an anatomist, my secretary, a pathologist, my mother, my brother, a plastic surgeon and a psychiatrist. I even had an answer written, but was convinced by my wife that it was badly contaminated with equine feces.

Everybody knows about the skin wrinkling and there were some pretty good guesses as to what was going on. Nothing measured up to a real scientific answer until I spoke to a physiologist friend who gave me more information about the water-absorbing capacities of the skin than I could use but spared me having to end the column with an unanswerable opinion.

The cornified or hardened layer of the skin is very thick over the fingers and the toes. But, it is far from inactive. Its water content varies depending upon the moisture of the environment as well as the psychological state of the person. Temperature perception can change (more aware of heat and cold when there is a lot of water in this layer of the skin) and the skin is much stickier when moist and therefore better for gripping things.

When immersed in water, this layer of skin tends to take up large amounts of moisture therefore swelling considerably. With no room to expand because it is firmly anchored, the skin surface becomes distorted, thus the wrinkles. It seems to make very little difference what kind of moisture the skin is exposed to since the outside environment would have to mimic exactly the fluid composition in the fingers for wrinkling not to take place. Thus, the wrinkling can occur with hands kept in rubber gloves exposed to one's own perspiration, in sea water, in dish water or in tap water.

The skin elsewhere on the body also takes up water but being much thinner and less firmly anchored, distortion doesn't occur. As well, the presence of oil secreting structures elsewhere (there are none on palms and soles) decrease fluid uptake.

Good luck, good health, good-by!

Lansing to take action on state units housing

By DENNIS BROWN and CHRISTOPHER TANNER

The City of Lansing plans to take legal action against the State of Michigan for unconstitutionally housing some of its departments outside the city limits.

Lansing Mayor Gerald Graves, who announced the city's intention at a meeting of the State Building Commission on Tuesday, said that Article 5, Section 9 of the Michigan Constitution requires that these departments must be "at the seat of government." Article 3, Section 1 of the Constitution says that the "seat of government shall be at Lansing."

"The State of Michigan is under a moral and legal obligation to house these departments within the city," Lansing city attorney Peter Houk said.

Mayor Graves said the state has moved about 23 agencies outside of Lansing which will be affected by the case.

But Raymond E. Padgett, property manager for the Dept. of Management and Budget, said "in compliance with the constitution, we've made ce tain that all heads and executives of the 19 principal departments have their offices in downtown Lansing."

Padgett said minor offices of various departments are housed outside of Lansing, particularly in Detroit, or at the Secondary Complex in Eaton Township.

He said plans are under way to move major portions of the Commerce and Labor Dept. to the Secondary Complex in the near future, but the executive offices will remain in Lansing.

The City of Lansing expects to file the suit before the month is out, Houk said. "Many people have moved here and become an integral part of Lansing because of their work with the state," Houk said.

"Now they will, in effect, be required to move.

"The is bound to have an adverse effect on our property tax base," Houk said. "The move will also have a very serious effect upon business confidence in Lansing," he said.

"There will be a very bad ripple effect on the downtown Lansing retail businesses," Houk said. "The major portion of their businesses comes from state workers who live here or come to work here.

"The downtown restaurant business will also be seriously affected."

The state already weakened Lansing's tax base when it took over a solidly residential district west of the Capitol to use for a new capital complex, making the land tax exempt. The state built a million dollar sewer system on this site then stopped work on the new capital complex. The state presently rents more than one million square feet of office space locally.

Mayor Graves said the city has notified the state of its intentions by letter and is planning to proceed with the filing actions. The building commission adopted a resolution asking the governor for his opinion on the matter.

BILL WOULD BROADEN STUDENT LIABILITY ASMSU to eye damage proposal

SU students may find themselves doing thinking before acting in the near re if one student has his way at the SU meeting Thursday night. bStark, a staff member of the ASMSU Aid cabinet, plans to ask the ASMSU members to add a general student lation that would make students liable damage, destruction or theft of ersity property that results from their.

Stark has sent copies of the bill and the rationale behind the proposal to board members and some University officials to speed up its progress. Stark has also arranged to talk to the policy committee about the bill Tuesday night. He said he hoped the policy committee would intoduce the bill at the meeting Thursday. If the committee did, it would be possible for the board to vote on the proposal then.

However, ASMSU President Brian Raymond said he hopes the board will postpone any action until it has more time to get feedback from other organizations, students and University officials.

"The University has existed for 120 years without this regulation, so I think we can wait five more months," Raymond said.

Stark said he would like the amendment approved as soon as possible because it is a long process to add a student regulation. If ASMSU aproves the change, the the Academic Council, President Wharton responsible for replacing the window if they were playing the game in the wrong area.

"They know they should be playing ball in the IM (intramural) fields and not near the buildings," Stark said. Current regulations would make students pay for the window only if they had intended on throwing it through the windows. Stark said carelessness, irresponsibility and the failure to exercise reasonable care and caution can contribute or result in property damage or theft. "If I walk down a hall and see one of the large mirrors hanging by one screw, I'm responsible if the mirror falls down and breaks if I don't tell anybody," Stark said. "I don't think students should have to fix it, but they should tell someone."

In his written rationale for the proposed regulation, Stark said the amendment would hold students responsible for careless, irresponsible and negligent conduct when that conduct contributes to or results in property damage or theft.

"Further, this amendment would enforce proposed regulation would then be sent to a high ethical standard of conduct for the the University Student Affairs committee, MSU student, thus resulting in less prope

the damage costs would not be absorbed by the University.

Last winter term an estimated $17,407 worth of damage took place in the public areas of residence halls such as hallways, public lavatories and elevators. A year ago, the estimate was $12.513.

The figures do not include the costs from the theft or breakage of silverware or dishes which averages about $100,000 a year.

University officials are applauding the recommendation and calling it long over-

"An all-University regulation with some teeth in it is needed," Robert Underwood, manager of Residence Halls Programs, said. "The present system makes it hard to hold people responsible for damage."

Officials estimate that $152,693.82 will be spent this year to replace and fix damaged areas and equipment at the residence hall level.

Actually, what the proposed regulation could mean is that students who do something they should not do or omit something they should do, or improperly do what might be done lawfully, and their actions result in damaged or stolen property, the student can be held responsible financially and otherwise. Stark said the amendment will aid in recovering losses due to negligently caused damage but will not affect intentional or accidental damage.

Cassavetes' film abominable

By EDD RUDZATS State News Reviewer As a director, John Cassavetes loves to improvise. about in a meaningless manner during the major portion of the film. There are moments in "A Woman Under the Influence" when it appears the cameramen begins to lose touch, but untripped and the camera swayed fortunately, Cassavetes as but Cassavetes could not reshoot the scene. Another exasperating instance of Cassavetes' slipshod Instead he strives for a style occurs when the microphone recording the conversations between the characters slips right down into the middle of the screen and then reascends. There is no reason for this type of laziness and negligence. It destroys the mood of the film and hampers the realism that Cassavetes is so pretentiously trying to achieve. "A Woman Under the Influence" is soap opera masquerading as art. The script actually has little depth, and though it provides Cassavetes' wife, Gena Rowlands, with a juicy part, she squeezes it till it is dry and then continues squeezing.

In all her sequences, Rowlands overacts horrendously, grimacing, contorting her face, squirming, staring, bugging her eyes and mumbling to herself. Rowlands delivers such a frenzied performance, trying so hard to develop a mentally unstable character that everything she does is too much. In fact, much of the film is too much. It is pitched at a level of hysterics that bursts forth from the characters with dreary repetitiveness. This much hysteria only distances the viewer rather than involving him.

Furthermore, "A Woman Under the Influence," while already an abominable two hours and one-half, seems longer as Cassavetes finds an honest emotion and then lingers on it for so long that the length of certain sequences becomes excruciating to sit through. The painfulness lies not in the honest reproduction of the emotions of the characters but on the pounding in of that emotion that Cassavetes attempts.

The film should have ended right after Mabel has her breakdown rather than putting the audience through a sixmonths-later segment that adds nothing to the tale and only allows Rowland to go crazy again and lets Peter Falk, as her insensitive husband, prove his insensitivity again by smashing her in the mouth. For stuff like this the daily soaps are more polished.

"A Woman Under the Influence" may seem to some a diamond in the rough, but don't be fooled. It is really a dirty piece of coal with aspirations to the diamond class. There is nothing brilliant, sparkling or shiny about this overdone and overpraised piece of homemovie-making. A piece of coal it is and a piece of coal it will stay, so why get your hands dirty?

First day sales brisk for OSU football game

By STEVE STEIN State News Sports Writer

The Buckeyes are coming! The Buckeyes are coming!

Even though Woody Hayes' powerful Ohio State team won't be in East Lansing to face the Spartans until Sept. 13, MSU students, faculty and staff descended upon the athletic ticket office in Jenison Fieldhouse Tuesday for the upcoming Spartan Stadium battle.

Unreserved general admission seats at $4 each for MSU students for both the OSU and Miami of Ohio (Sept. 20) football games went on sale for the first time Tuesday.

In addition, $7 reserved seats for all Spartan games, home and away, went on sale to students, faculty and staff.

Tickets for the general public won't go on sale until June 2.

are being played before the beginning of fall term, are prices at $4 per game while the season package for the four remaining home games will cost $12.

Bill Beardsley, asst. athletic director in charge of business, said this is the first time that tickets for pre-fall term games have been sold before the day of the game.

Beardsley also explained that many students will buy tickets on their present ID card who will not be going to school in the fall.

"It's still a darn good deal for students and for us," Beardsley said.

Beardsley also noted that there is going to be a new method this fall for picking up tickets for the four games on the season package.

Students will receive a two-part ticket when they purchase the pa ge at fal registration. One part will be a general admission ticket for the Sept. 27 North Carolina State game and the other will be an exchange ticket for the three remaining home games. · On a class priority basis, students can pick up tickets the week after the North Carolina State game for the other three home contests against Michigan (Oct. 11), Illinois (Oct. 25) and Northwestern (Nov. 15).

Coach Parks topples records

By ANN WILLIAMSON State News Sports Writer

Jennifer Parks is living proof that records are made to be broken, even if you are a coach. Parks, the MSU women's swimming coach for the past two years, set two national records several weeks ago in the 30 to 34 age division at the national masters championship meet in Fort Lauderdale, Fla. Her times of 1:11.2 in the 100-yard backstroke and 2:33.1 in the 200-yard backstroke bettered the old marks by almost two full seconds in the 100 and over four seconds in the 200.

But Parks wasn't satisfied with simply grabbing two first-place spots in the nationals, so she went on and took another first-place finish in the 200-yard individual medley with a time of 2:35.1. She also just missed taking top honors in the 100 individual medley by three-tenths of a second with a 1:09 clocking.

Representing the Lansing Oak Park Village Athletic Club and the Michigan Masters Swim Club, Parks was just one of many swimmers of many different ages competing in the meet. One determined woman of 82 even got in the action and swam in the freestyle event.

But Parks admits that age and experience don't always take away the butterflies before entering any competition.

"It's all right to be competing at the national level as a coach, but I don't know if I like the overt nervousness before the meet begins," she said with a laugh. "But it was interesting to see how I handled it. No matter how old you are, you still have to know how to pace your own races. "I'm always too nervous before the first or second day of the meets. You'd think I would know better by now, but you're never quite sure about yourself. I guess I still get nervous, but I think you can approach events with more maturity and can think better once you get a little older. If you're not stronger physically, you've got to be stronger mentally.'

But it wasn't just nervousness that bothered

Parks before she made the trip down to Fort Lauderdale. She soon discovered that not only would she need to practice to get back in shape for the upcoming challenge, but that she'd have to adjust to a new style of backstroking.

"Since I had been busy coaching, I didn't have too much extra time and didn't really start swimming every day until the end of March," Parks said. "I started working out with the men's swim coach, Dick Fetters, and really found it interesting to work with another coach. You can always talk about your strokes, but you still really need someone to actually look at them. My extra push came from Fetters.

"The stroke I always used when I was in college was a straight arm backstroke - very flat. In the past 12 to 15 years, it's evolved into a bent arm stroke, and it's taken me a long time to adjust to that change. I worked it out myself, but I've got to credit Fetters for standing over me and telling me to 'bend that arm.' '

Parks has had experience swimming in some major meets since her student days at Wellesley College in Massachusetts. She competed in the Pan Am trials held at MSU in 1959, and tried her luck again in 1960 at the Olympic trials in Detroit. Unfortunately for Parks, she was not among the two swimmers selected to compete in either of the two world-famous games.

"Tve never considered myself a great swimmer, just a good one in local swimming," she said.

But Parks was able to prove herself as at least one of the better women swimmers around the nation with her record-breaking performances. She's hoping that her successes motivate others into some type of physical exercise.

"It was interesting to see men and women you had competed against years ago coming close to the times they used to, and just taking the time out to keep fit," she said. "I hope that by my swimming, other people will be encouraged to get active in swimming, tennis or whatever other sport they like."

A week earlier Rogers led his Butterfield Hall team to a first-place tie for the residence hall title with an impressive 73, but finished runnerup in lowest gross score to Tim Donnelly by a stroke.

This time around however, there was no question who would go home with the gold medal as Rogers finished five strokes ahead of Merton Goode and Reinhold Schmieding for the individual championship.

"It would encourage people apprehend criminals," Vaughn said. He also credited the bill with the potential of creating greater rapport between the police and the public.

As for financial concerns, Vaughn said that the House bill, like McCollough's Senate bill, is really at a bare minimum as far as costs are concerned. He pointed out that the bill only calls for three members on the compensation commission, a number which may be too low realistically.

programs. Five times the bill has passed the Senate, only to be killed in the House. But strategy to get it through this session includes slipping the concept into a U.S. criminal code revision. This proposal may pay up to 90 per cent of the costs of each state's program. But the biggest boost for the program, as far as Vaughn and McCollough are concerned, is public opinion. "People support it," Vaughn said. "My typical mail run goes

'it's time we did something for the victims of crime.' " "It's time we stop playing Russian roulette with society," McCollough emphasized. He said that people are disgusted with what they consider the relatively good treatment a criminal receives while the victim is often left destitute. The sponsors of legislation are not the only ones who speak out for the acceptance of this concept. "One of the things police are harping about is that nobody takes care of the victims," said John Beech, legal aid to the Lansing Police Dept. Beech also aids the Michigan Assn. of Chiefs of Police in preparing suggestions for the state legislature.

Beech said that he can understand the anti-attorney sentiment in the House which might block passage of the crime victims relief law. "I think with the current medical sentiment on no-fault insurance malpractice and Watergate, that lawyers are getting a bad name," Beech said. "The press has been detrimental to attorneys."

would be a vital part of the appeal process if such a bill was passed. He cautioned, however, that his impressions are only based on portions of the bills he has read.

are they (the person) going to perfect their appeal themselves?" Beech asked. A spokesperson for the insurance lobby of the state said that such a bill would pose no problem for the insurance companies.

"It's not our concern. It's not competition, it is something we could not insure," the spokesperson said. He added that crime is not an insurable risk and that it would take a change in the laws to allow insurance companies to take such risks. While the bill for compensation may be passed in Michigan, crime victims compensation boards of one type or another are already functioning in at least 14 other states. One of the

"I think we have one of the best programs right now," said Winfred Pang, executive secretary of the Injury Compensation Commission. Pang said that Hawaii has a three-member commission which meets two times a week. As of May, the commission has 230 cases pending and handles 25 cases a month. Pang said that the commission relies heavily on police reports. In order for an award to be made, the crime must Beech said that attorneys have taken place within 18 months before an application is filed, the police must be contacted within a reasonable length of time, and there must be some bodily injury. But the Hawaiian crime victim compen-"If a person's turned down, sation commission often stretches the meaning of resident of the state, just so the crime did take place in Hawaii. Since 1967, when the legislation was passed to set up a crime victims compensation board, the State of Hawaii has for a total of $7,619,905. given a total of $967,092 for 700

225 to 250 cases a month," said Max Nissman, one of the five commissioners on the board. He said that when the statute setting up the compensation board was passed in 1967, it provided for only three members. But because of the increase of work, there is a definite need for five.

One unique aspect of the New York program is that the state pays an unlimited amount for medical bills.

"We've had one hospital bill at $35,000," Nissman said. "And another case projected at a quarter of a million dollars."

The five commissioners in New York are spread out geographically with the main office in Albany as the headquarters for the Chairman, Stanley Van Rensselaer. Three other commissioners, including Nissman, are located in New York City, with the fifth board member stationed in Buffalo. Of the 8,064 claims that have been handled in New York since January 1971 to December 1974, the commission has given out 2,943 awards

If everything goes as planned, Michigan will soon have a crime victim relief program and join in what has become both a state and nationwide concern for the average citizen, too often the victim of crime.
