End of 18-month recession assured by economic index

By WIRE SERVICES
The government's index of leading economic indicators released Thursday in May for the third straight month, assuring that the 18-month long recession has ended.
No time since World War II has a month rise in this closely watched economic indicator failed to signal an end to bad times and return to economic prosperity.
May, the index rose 2.1 per cent, ending a slump of 3 per cent and 1.1 per cent in April and March.
The upturn ended a slump in the index that began in mid-1973, several months after the economy entered the worst of post-war recessions.
The three-month rise in the index, "strength, breadth and duration," James L. Pate, top economist for the Commerce Dept., said.
The triple increase, "reinforces the evidence of improvement in economic conditions and the developing recovery," he added.
However, a recovery alone in leading indicators would not insure a return to the current unemployment of 9.2 per cent, since the total number of new workers has been constantly growing, too.

Administration economists do not expect the recovery to make a dent in unemployment before late fall or early winter.
President Ford said at his news conference Wednesday that he expects unemployment to decline more sharply than his advisers have projected.
The latest jump in the Commerce Dept. employment indicator provided some support for Ford's view. The rise over three months totaled 6.3 per cent. The April increase was adjusted downward from the original 4.2 per cent record to 3 per cent. But that 3 per cent still equaled the record set in June 1958.
The department said the strongest influence pushing the index up was the change in wholesale prices of key raw materials. The increase in that category indicated rising demand from manufacturers and producers.
In another encouraging report, the department said the nation's foreign trade account reached a near-record surplus in May. The trade surplus amounted to $1.05 billion, compared to a $566.88 million surplus in April and was only slightly below the March record of $1.3 billion.

A big factor in the trade surplus was a drop of nearly 21 per cent in the volume of imported oil. Officials had expected a big trade deficit this year but the worldwide recession has hit imports harder than exports.
In further economic developments:
•Beef industry experts said in interviews that the record high beef prices are expected to come down later this year.
•Treasury Secretary William E. Simon said that preventing the nation's cities from falling into the financial plight affecting New York City is now the central issue.
•The Senate approved compromise legislation reportedly acceptable to President Ford, who vetoed an earlier bill. It includes a $10 billion increase in home mortgage purchase authority for the government.
•Senate and House conferees worked out a compromise on an unemployment compensation bill guaranteeing continued payments of up to 65 weeks of jobless benefits.

•The government said the nation's welfare rolls rose by eight-tenths of one per cent to 11,346,994 in March, primarily because of high unemployment.
Economists widely agree that the recession has either already ended or will end soon. Where the experts differ now is on whether the recovery will be strong enough to bring unemployment down.

University to convert visitor lots to faculty, staff parking areas

By MARY ANN CHICKSHAW
State News Staff Writer
The University will try to clamp down harder on students who use unregistered cars on campus this fall by eliminating three parking lots on the south end of campus.
The three lots are: S Lot, the half-circle lot next to Shaw Hall; E Lot, the half-circle lot next to Erickson Hall; and C Lot, the rectangular lot across from the International Center. The change will drop visitor parking from about 2,500 to 1,820.
The University will also insure that only authorized persons will park in the lot next to the Student Services Building next fall by installing a gate at the entrance of the lot sometime this summer. The gate will open and close only with a gatecard issued to faculty members or staff.
Currently, the lot is marked for faculty and staff parking, but University parking officials have found that others have been parking in the area when the six meter-parking spaces in front of the building are occupied.

"On any given day, about one-third of the cars on campus are unregistered," Bissell said. "We can't control the University like we used to."

"...and you'll look sweet, upon the seat, of a bicycle built for two."
John Czarnecki did not go so far as crooning that old love tune for East Lansing City Manager Patriarche, but he did get the honorary chairperson of East Lansing's Fourth of July Community Bike Day to lead the Easy Rider Tour — on a tandem bike.
"I told them if they get me a tandem bike, my wife and I would lead the Easy Rider Tour," Patriarche said.
And Czarnecki did not let him down.
Such are the shenanigans that are and will be going on because of East Lansing's fourth annual Community Bike Day.

Czarnecki and his Bike Day Committee have been preparing numerous events for that momentous Friday, which include a 25-mile competitive race — replete with a LeMans-style foot race to the bicycles — and the Easy Rider Tour, where those who aren't up to the demanding 25-mile competition can breeze along at their own pace for five, 10 or 15 miles around a preset course.
And, of course, there will be the celebrities. An informal survey of notables conducted by the State News turned up some interesting results.
C. Patrick Larowe, MSU professor of economics and frequenter of campus bike paths, said he will participate in the festivities.

"You know I ride a bike year round and am in good shape to be in it," he said.
"When a guy my age rides a bike all the time, I think he should participate."
State Rep. Lynn Jondahl, D-East Lansing, said he will participate, as he has in the past, if he can get away from his legislative duties.
Jondahl added, however, that his pedaling prowess does have its limitations.
"I limit myself to three-speed. I haven't graduated to a 10-speed yet," he said.
Congressman Bob Carr, D-East Lansing, will also try to make an appearance at the ceremonies after attending to some of his duties in Jackson County.
City Councilman George Griffiths said he will be a participating pedaler.

Among those who will not be at the control of a two wheeler, though, are Mayor Wilbur Brookover and Jack Breslin, MSU executive vice president.
Brookover said he will be attending a mayor's conference in Boston, but still has fond memories of last year's events, which were interrupted by an energetic cloud-burst.
"I was over there and I guess I got out before I got drowned," he said.
Breslin, who said he will probably be golfing instead of pumping, added that he was not sure if he even had a bike to participate with, even if he planned to.
"I may have one of those old-fashioned jobs down in the basement, but I sure wouldn't ride one now," he said.

ANONYMOUS LETTERS SENT FBI subterfuge revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI secretly tried to get three teachers fired, including one at Wayne State University in Detroit, distributed phony right-wing newsletters on two college campuses and wrote anonymous letters to the parents of student antiwar activists during the 1960s, newly disclosed FBI documents show.
Those activities were part of the agency's counterintelligence operation against the New Left. The FBI says the operation, dubbed COINTELPRO, began May 9, 1968, and ended April 28 1971.
The 256 pages of documents were the latest COINTELPRO files obtained and made public by the Socialist Workers Party in its damage suit against the FBI. The agency turned over the files in compliance with a court order.
"Only the complete release of all secret files will tell us how many people the FBI railroaded out of jobs and harassed in other ways because their political views were unpopular with the FBI," said Syd Stapleton, national secretary of the Political Rights Defense Fund, which is providing legal assistance for the Socialist Workers suit.

term. The decision was based on information received from Austin police.
In another operation involving a teacher, Detroit FBI agents in 1969 sent an anonymous eight-page letter criticizing Wayne State University Professor David Herreshoff to Robert J. Huber, then a state senator investigating campus protests.
The letter, signed "a fed-up taxpayer," described Herreshoff's involvement with left-wing political groups and suggested that he should be fired.
In a third case, FBI agents sent an anonymous letter to the Washington, D.C., school superintendent in 1969 in an unsuccessful effort to get a socialist, Maude Adams White, fired as an elementary school teacher.

The memos describe other anonymous letters mailed in 1968 to the parents of John Kaza and Steve Eipper, who took part in a fast to protest the Vietnam war while they were students at Oberlin College in Ohio.
The purpose was to encourage the parents "to protest to the college that the fast is being allowed at the school and that socialists are active there," said one memo.

According to the memos, Evelyn Rose Sell was teaching in the Austin Tex., school system's Head Start program in the 1969-70 school year when FBI agents covertly fed information about her Socialist Workers activities, including her unsuccessful candidacy for the State of Michigan school board in 1968, to Austin police who relayed the information to school officials.
The school system chose not to renew Sell's contract at the end of the school

Gandhi arrests 676 after protests begin

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's government said it arrested 676 persons Thursday during the first 12 hours of a state of emergency declared to combat what it called a grave emergency threatened by internal disturbances.
Violence — including stoning and tear gas attacks — and partial general strikes which closed offices and businesses were reported in the main commercial city of Bombay and central and northern India. The situation generally was described as calm.

An official spokesman said the arrests took place in nine of India's 21 states. Of those detained, 450 were taken into custody in central Madhya Pradesh state and 90 in New Delhi.
The spokesman said he could not give the names of those arrested but acknowledged that they included leaders of non-Communist opposition parties.
Indian press reports and other nongovernment sources reported that among those arrested were Jayaprakash Narayan, an elder statesman of the Indian independence movement and one of Gandhi's harshest critics; Raj Narain, the Socialist politician whose challenge of her 1971 election victory resulted in the present crisis; Asoka Mehta, the leader of the old Congress party, which broke away from Gandhi in 1969; and two leading critics in her own ruling Congress party, Ram Dhan, and Chandra Sekhar.

Courselector fate in air; accuracy, expense cited

By BRAD MARTISIUS
State News Staff Writer
Courselector — a course description handbook intended as a lifesaver for students drowning in a sea of MSU courses — may itself be in danger of sinking.
Only a month after its May debut on campus, Courselector's fate is undecided because University officials are not sure they can afford to foot the bill for an undertaking of questionable success.
Nevertheless, the administrators admit that a definite need exists to inform students about the contents of courses offered at MSU.
Courselector is a 45-page guide to MSU course offerings. It lists course requirements, frequency and content of exams, a course outline, basic course objectives and grading philosophy.
It was originally offered as an alternative to MSU's catalog of courses, "which is basically worthless," according to ASMSU president Brian Raymond.

About 20,000 copies of Courselector have been distributed so far, with 8,000 being held in reserve for freshmen entering MSU in the fall. The cost of the guide included $160 taken from ASMSU funds, with the balance paid by advertising.
"We wanted to give more information on course selections to new students," Raymond said. "But now that the first issue has been published, we'd like to see the administration take over the responsibility for it. It's just too much work for a few students who aren't getting paid."
Assistant provost Dorothy Arata agrees with Raymond that the present catalog is inadequate for students' needs.
"Students want and have a right to know what the instructional model is," she said. "They're not getting the information they need from the catalog of courses."
However, Arata said the present issue of Courselector is not very helpful either,

The non-Communist parties had announced they would begin a civil disobedience campaign on Sunday to try to force the resignation of Gandhi for having been found guilty of electoral malpractices. The government said this was the reason the emergency was declared.
On Tuesday, a Supreme Court justice ruled she could continue as prime minister (continued on page 12)

Agents trapped by gunfire

FBI agents attempting to serve warrants at the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation were pinned down by gunfire Thursday. A spokesman for the FBI in Rapid City, S.D., said the agents were attempting to serve assault and robbery warrants on an undetermined number of persons when they were pinned down by gunfire five miles southeast of the reservation community of Oglala.

Government scandals roundup

The Justice Dept. filed criminal charges Thursday against David C. Simmons, a former Defense Dept. official accused of bilking the government of $1.2 million intended to buy petroleum products for the Thieu government in South Vietnam.

The department charged Simmons in a criminal complaint with violating the conflict of interest statute by receiving the money illegally and with concealing receipt of the money in documents submitted to the government.

Meanwhile, former campaign manager for Hubert Humphrey, Jack L. Chestnut, was sentenced to four months in prison and fined $5,000 Thursday for arranging for Associated Milk Producers Inc., a dairymen's cooperative, to secretly contribute $12,000 to Sen. Hubert Humphrey's 1970 Senate campaign by paying off bills from an advertising agency.

And a $10,000 fine and a felony conviction have ended a six-year fight by former Sen. Daniel B. Brewster of Maryland against federal prosecution on charges that he received bribes to influence his votes on postal rate legislation.

Navy grounds Phantom fleet

About one-third of the Navy's 600 F4 Phantom jet fighters have been inspected after the entire force was grounded for safety checks, the Navy said Thursday.

The grounding was disclosed five days after it was ordered following investigation of an April 9 crash blamed on a malfunction in the control system of an F4.

The Navy said that 54 of 205 Phantoms already inspected are defective.

The Phantoms will be returned to flying from aircraft carriers and ground bases around the world as each is inspected and cleared, a Navy spokesman said.

The welder repairman in the Detroit Cadillac Fleetwood plant said he does not plan any major change in his life style. "I just live like the working man I am. I don't need all that flashy stuff."

Private uranium sales sought

Envisioning "an entirely new private industry in America," President Ford asked Congress Thursday to allow private firms to produce and sell enriched uranium to nuclear power plants around the globe.

In proposing an end to a federal monopoly in this field, Ford talked of "an exciting new course which will help assure the energy independence we seek and a significantly strengthened economy at the same time."

Federal officials estimate privately operated plants producing uranium fuel for utilities here and abroad would be doing $9 billion a year in business by the end of the century.

Fighting continues in Beirut

Armed factions of Lebanese and Palestinians stepped up their street battles in Beirut suburbs Thursday and police said the conflict was spreading. In three days, the fighting took an unofficial toll of 10 dead and 35 wounded.

A split between Palestinian guerrillas threatened to aggravate hostilities. The Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine denounced cease-fire calls by guerrilla leader Yasir Arafat.

Several fires were started by mortar and rocket explosions in the embattled area, but fire engines failed to reach them because of the continued shooting, residents reported.

Students still held by rebels

U.S. diplomats crossed Lake Tanganyika in a boat in an attempt to rescue three kidnapped American and Dutch students, but a Zaire gunboat shelled the shore and prevented the craft from landing as one of the captives signaled with flashing mirrors, witnesses reported Wednesday.

The witnesses said the attempt was abandoned Tuesday and the rescue boat returned 30 miles across the lake from Zaire to Kigoma, Tanzania, without the hostages, who were abducted five weeks ago by Marxist guerrillas.

It was unclear whether the shelling by the government boat was deliberately intended to prevent the rescue or whether the gunners believed the boat was just one of many guerrilla craft operating on the lake.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today that states may not involuntarily confine mental patients who present no danger to themselves or others without treatment.

And the court left open the possibility that such persons cannot be confined against their will even if treatment is provided. "We need not decide whether, when, or by what procedures a mentally ill person may be confined," the court said.

"A finding of 'mental illness' alone cannot justify a state locking a person up against his will and keeping him indefinitely in simple custodial confinement," Justice Potter Stewart wrote for the court.

The decision marked the first time the Supreme Court has considered whether states are obliged by the Constitution to provide competent psychological or psychiatric treatment for patients committed to state institutions.

The court did not discuss the type or frequency of treatment required for mental patients, but said federal judges have the power to review the question.

On Wednesday, victims of job discrimination scored a double victory in the Supreme Court, but the court handed a setback to poor blacks fighting exclusion from the suburbs.

In a 7-1 decision on a suit by black workers in a Southern paper mill, the court held that:

•Victims of job discrimination need not show that the discrimination was intentional to collect back pay.

•Companies must demonstrate that tests given to job applicants have a strong relationship to the job in question.

In the housing case, the court divided 5-4 in rejecting a challenge to a zoning ordinance in the Rochester, N.Y., suburb of Penfield. The decision is expected to make it more difficult for inner-city residents to combat suburban housing restrictions in court.

To do so, said the justices, a plaintiff, "must allege specific, concrete facts demonstrating that the challenged practices harm him, and that he personally would benefit in a tangible way from the court's intervention."

Reaching its more difficult decisions as it nears the end of its current term, probably next Monday, the court also decided two other cases by a 5-4 margin.

In one, the court held that federal law does not give labor unions or labor leaders the automatic right to trial by jury on contempt of court charges.

In the other case, the court ruled that its decision two years ago that warrantless arrests by roving Border Patrol agents are unconstitutional — unless the agent has probable cause to suspect a crime — should not be applied retroactively.

HEW secretary

resigns position

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford today announced the resignation of Caspar W. Weinberger as secretary of health, education and welfare and nominated Dr. David Matthews, president of the University of Alabama, to succeed him.

In a letter to the President, Weinberger said his resignation was occasioned by "reasons with which you are familiar." There have been reports Weinberger was considering resigning because of the health of his wife, Jane, who suffers from arthritis.

"I would greatly prefer that you were able to remain as a member of my team," President Ford wrote Weinberger. "Few have matched the skill, dedication, versatility and good judgment which you brought to the public service."

NEW YORK (AP) — Severe air turbulence may have caused an Eastern Airlines jet to take a sudden dip during a thunderstorm and crash at the edge of Kennedy Airport killing 110 persons, federal investigators say.

The doomed 727 jetliner was coming in too low, George A. Van Epps, director of the National Transportation Safety Board said Wednesday.

Lightning, which several witnesses say struck the plane as it was landing, is also being investigated as a factor in Tuesday's crash, one of the worst air disasters in U.S. history.

Of the 14 survivors, including a Baton Rouge, La., man and his two young daughters, 10 were in critical condition with severe burns and multiple fractures. The four others, including two crew members, were listed as in either "serious" or "satisfactory" condition.

Several pilots reported unstable air conditions at about the time of the flaming crash. One captain of an Eastern L1011 jumbo jet aborted his approach to Kennedy and landed instead at nearby Newark Airport.

Less than 20 minutes before the crackup, a DC8 of the Flying Tiger airline called the Kennedy Tower to report wind shears, capricious and powerful swerves and surges of wind, said Richard R. Kleinert, chief of the Federal Aviation Administration's air carrier safety office at the airport.

Games, not jazz, at Stables

By FRANK FOX
State News Staff Writer

Who is playing this week at The Stables?

The jukebox. Since the East Lansing home of nationally known jazz and folk acts, The Stables has been reborn as "Ye Olde Barn, Tavern Arcade," a converted barn on East Grand River. The Stables once featured performers of the caliber of Miles Davis, Les McCann, Charles Mingus and other jazz greats as well as Phil Ochs, Country Joe and the Fish, and Waylon Jennings.

Now, the only performers are the occasional pool and pinball players who try out the newly-installed amusement machines.

Where spectators used to wine and dine at tables near the stage are scattered assorted pool, foosball, air hockey and "shuffleboard" games, a "Pong" machine and three pool tables at the entrance. A reduced number of tables and bar patrons remain at the edges of the basement area.

Will The Stables ever again host extended acts by nationally acclaimed musicians?

There is a slight possibility that The Stables will return to a national entertainment format in the fall if something favorable happens in the economy of the city and the booking situation," claimed manager Hank Fountain.

But he added a cautionary note:

"If it (the arcade format) turns out to be a profitable venture, there is no reason why it should not be permanent."

He said the change in format was due to economic difficulties. He suggested irregular — and often low — business volume plus increasing fees for entertainers led to the change.

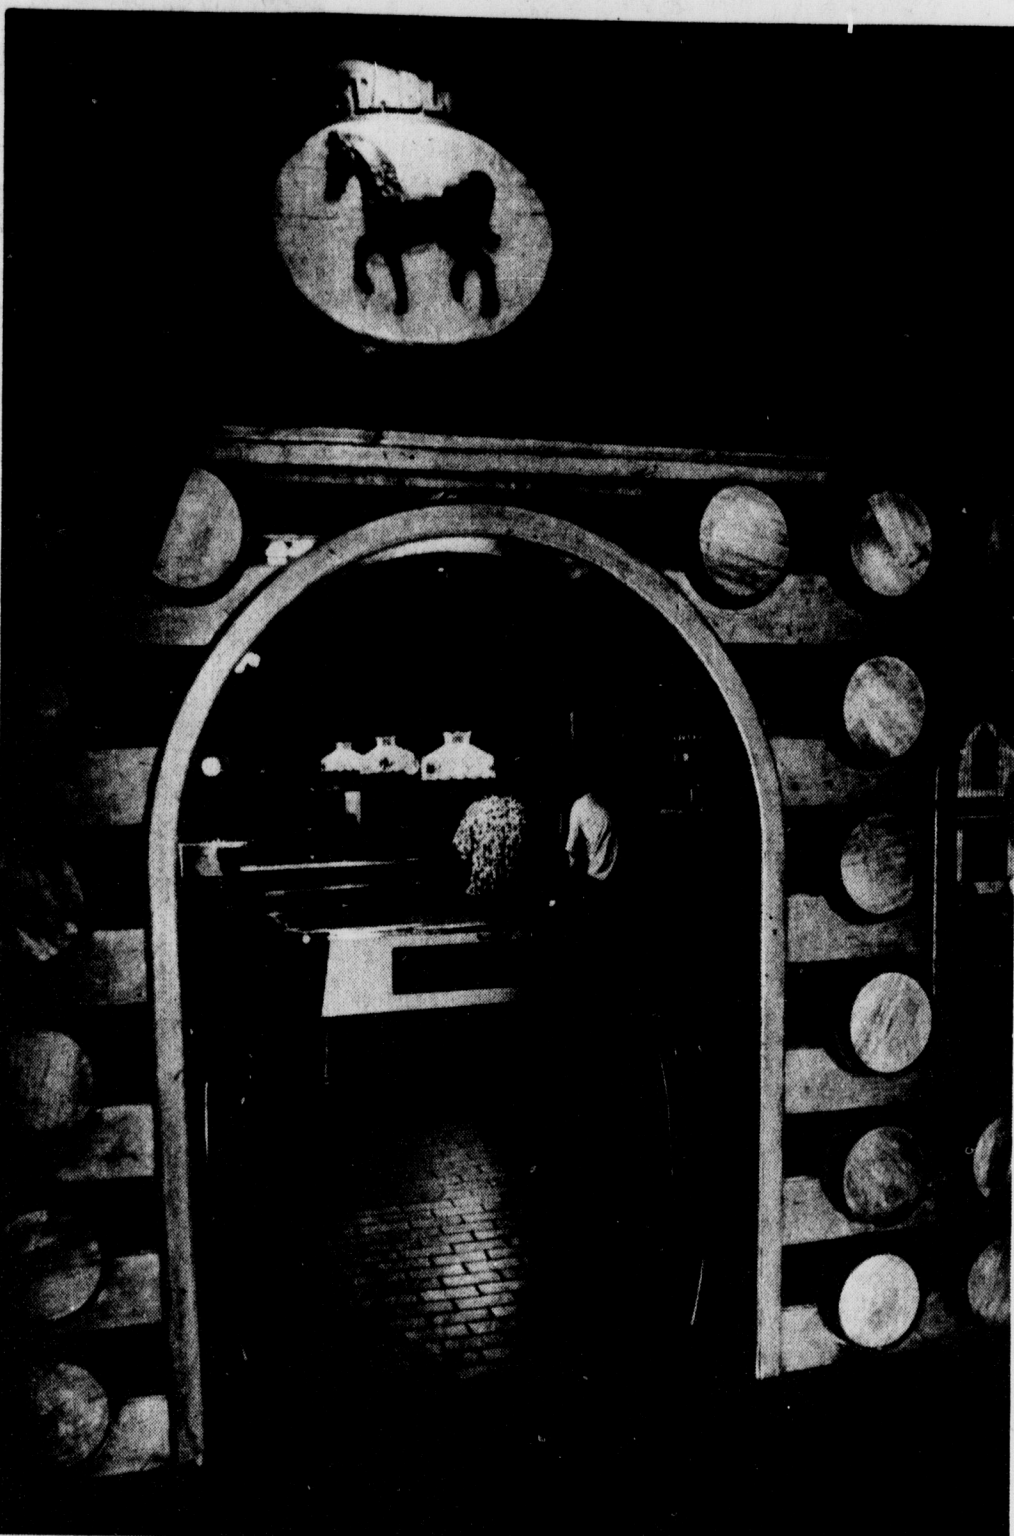

People just didn't come out in large enough numbers during the week, though weekend audiences were usually good, he said. Also, the price difference between paying entertainers for six-day gigs and weekend-only performances did not make it practical for the restaurant-bar to book just for weekends, considering The Stables' moderate seating capacity.

Now, beer and mixed drinks only are offered at the bar. Food service from the kitchen has been discontinued. One, perhaps two employees are all that is necessary at any given time, Fountain said.

"Ye Olde Barn" will offer a "Bogue Monday" special from 4 to 7 p.m. on Mondays with substantially reduced prices on draft beer and mixed drinks. Another special feature is planned: a basketball hoop at the rear of the building.

"You can stop out here to shoot through the hoop and when you get thirsty come into the bar for some beer," Fountain said.

But he added that it would be strictly B.Y.O.B. (Bring your own basketball.)

It may look like the Stables from the outside, but the interior has taken on a new appearance. Because of poor audience turnout, the management turned the nightclub into a pool and pinball arcade.

'U' officials start fire defense plan

MARY ANN CHICKSHAW
State News Staff Writer

Almost five weeks after the fire in the Human Ecology Building which injured 10 people and caused $150,000 damage, University officials of the board of trustees have started action on a comprehensive campus fire protection plan.

While most University officials claim the fire in the Human Ecology Building had nothing to do with the latest fire drive, all say the fire brought their efforts out into open.

Last week's trustee meeting, University administrators agreed the board that the university was aware of all fire deficiencies on campus and nothing was being done to meet the problem.

Three weeks ago, the Dept. of Public Safety (DPS) drew up a list of 27 buildings on campus that do not have fire alarm systems and a list of eight buildings that do not have adequate fire protection devices such as fire doors or closed stairwells. The lists were updated from ones originally started in 1972 at the request of Robert Siefert, the university architect, who is in charge of the fire safety program.

The University has also extended a formal invitation to State Fire Marshall and his assistants to come on campus and inspect eight buildings: Agriculture Hall, the Auditorium, Horticulture Building, Human Ecology Building, Museum, North Kedzie Hall, Olds Hall and the Union.

University officials hope to schedule one inspection per week so that all of them can be completed by the beginning of fall term. Three buildings, the Museum, the Horticulture Building and the Human Ecology Building have already been inspected.

After the fire marshals inspect each building, they will draw up a list of suggestions for the buildings to bring them up to the current standards in the state fire codes.

But since there is no law requiring the University to comply with the fire marshals' suggestions, it is up to the University to decide what will be done.

But the University has said it will follow the fire marshals' suggestions and also install fire alarms in the 27 buildings presently without them.

The state school fire safety code which governs buildings used for instructional purposes, is in effect only for buildings that are under construction. It does not specify criteria a school or University must follow to use older buildings.

Since the state fire safety code did not require fire alarms until 1959, any building built before 1959 does not need fire alarms even if it is used for instructional purposes, said George Catton, state fire marshal.

"After we get the fire marshals' suggestions, we will get an estimate of how much each suggestion would cost," said Siefert. "It will be up to someone else to decide if and when the work will be done."

Siefert said he was not sure who would make the final decision but said the vice president of business affairs, Roger Wilkinson, would decide if and where any money to correct the building would come from.

Siefert said the fire marshal's office will draw up a list of what they see as the critical buildings and what should be the University's first priorities.

Human comfort comes second

Suffer and swelter as you will, there is no way to beat the summer heat in MSU's buildings this summer unless you're a machine. At the peak of the energy crisis last year, the University deemed all new air conditioning for human comfort unfeasible because of energy costs, and halted any new air conditioning installment. The only acceptable rationale for new installation of air conditioning in 'U' buildings is the maintenance of equipment or machines that cannot operate in unusual heat. The edict, imposed by President Wharton in the chilly month of March, remains in effect indefinitely. Humans are expected to continue full scale operation in the meantime.

Trial date set but Brown gone

Sen. Basil Brown's day in court seems to be insured now if only everyone can be rounded up and let in on the secret of where and when his trial is set.

Brown, D - Highland Park, a Michigan senator for 18 years, was arrested Jan. 8 for possession of marijuana and hashish after police stopped him for erratic driving.

Brown at that time told police that he had no knowledge the drugs were in his car and said they were probably left there when another person had used his car.

Now, after Brown has unsuccessfully attempted to have the charges thrown out because of a technicality, the date of the trial has been set for July 25 in Eaton County District Court.

However, Brown's secretary told the State News that it was news to her and Brown that a trial had been called for and said they had not been contacted about it. Brown himself was unavailable for comment, she said. "He's in Canada."

Fire peril neglected

MSU has been lucky. If it were not, a campus fire long ago would have taken someone's life.

But because only a few injuries have resulted from the mostly minor fires in campus buildings over the years, a shocking situation has been allowed to exist for decades: at least 27 MSU buildings are without even basic fire protection equipment.

Only the vigilance of the Building Lands and Planning (BLP) Committee in recommending the closing of all campus buildings with inadequate fire protection finally exposed the University's incredible neglect of grossly unsafe conditions.

Though the University has a fire repair priority list, it includes only eight of the 27 buildings affected by the BLP committee's recommendation. It will be at least two years before even those eight are completely fireproofed and officials are now only evaluating the possibility of installing alarms in all University buildings.

University officials say the widespread lack of fire alarms and emergency escapes is not illegal because the buildings were constructed before 1959. Further, they say that the University has been working independently to improve campus fire safety conditions in the older buildings now that most new construction has stopped.

Undoubtedly, last year's Jenison Fieldhouse fiasco along with winter term fires in Cook Hall, and the serious fire in the Human Ecology Building which hospitalized one professor helped to shake University complacency.

But it shouldn't take a costly capacity reduction, expensive property damages and human injury to start the ball rolling.

MSU students and staff, no longer blissfully ignorant of the danger of working and studying in buildings without alarms, sprinkler systems, or adequate fire exits, should complain to the state fire marshal when they see dangerous conditions.

BLP members, when that committee is absorbed by another advisory committee this fall, must continue to press a reluctant University to put all 27 buildings on the fire priority list.

And the University must quickly realize that safety is one of the most fundamental needs, before another fire causes injury or death.

Higher education has always been understood to be risky. But no one in their right mind would have ever thought to include life and limb as one of those risks — until now.

Project Grapevine

With the death of Project Grapevine, MSU students have lost something important: a strong alternative medium in a one-newspaper campus. Their loss is the State News's loss too, for the Grapevine Journal, besides filling a need the State News could not, showed us where we failed and where we could improve.

Over the last seven years, Project Grapevine steered a controversial course. It has been best known for defending itself against sundry allegations that it mispent money allocated to it by organizations like the board of trustees, the State News and more recently, the Student Media Appropriations Board (SMAB).

But between bouts with organizations which could never prove it was spendthrift, Grapevine found time to complete many commendable projects.

For instance, it ran the Grapevine Journal, a professional-quality tabloid newspaper which has been the voice of minority students and the source of most of the project's economic woes.

It has also dabbled in a literary magazine, newsletters, radio, television, journalism workshops and scholarship funds.

One such scholarship, Grape-vine's Media Achievement Grant will live on even after its basement offices in the Student Services Building are relegated to another campus group.

The organization is selling all the equipment it gathered over the years and is putting the money in the fund, which gives an economically-deprived communications student $300 each year.

But even Grapevine's passing is not without controversy.

The organization says it failed because it cannot get enough money from a stingy SMAB to meet expenses. SMAB chairman Dan Dever says other campus media need money, too.

But Grapevine didn't consider itself just another campus communicator.

Grapevine wanted to be permanent. It wanted a budget. It wanted the Grapevine Journal to be a real alternative to the State News.

Everyone else relegated it to the great mass of alternative media — those shadowy operations which run on a diet of ditto paper and mimeograph ink, are here one day and gone the next.

Unfortunately, everyone else finally won.

'Sportsgate': whose fault?

Since the NCAA charged the football program with illegal practices, the whole campus has been embarrassed by its athletic department's putrid punt and pass politics.

Literally everything that boasts the green and white glory of MSU has turned blushing red. Rumor has it that even the omnipotent face of Sparty is distinctly blushing, while Denny and his asst. coaches have kept their faces (also reddened?) confined to their offices.

MSU has a virtual 'Sportsgate' on its hands.

But while the public blames the coaches, the coaches blame credit cards that perform disappearing acts and the befuddled football team wonders if they will ever see turf next fall, it seems no one considers putting blame where it truly belongs: on our society.

Our society of football fanatics, including you and me and everyone else who buys their packet of football tickets at registration, are the ones who make it possible for such sports nonsense to go on. It can go on because the whole sports power panorama is so beyond everyone's comprehension. We numbly buy the tickets while repressing thoughts that quite possibly we are supporting a rule-breaking regime.

After all, ours is a society that puts enormous value on all sports — such a value that those in top positions suffering from acute Nixonitis think they have unrestricted power to recruit athletes regardless of rules. It's the ultimate seduction: a $2,019 dollar scholarship plus books plus coats or cars in return for playing a child's game.

But ours is a society that awards Muhammad Ali $5 million for battering the brains of some brawny beast. Out in New York the Cosmos soccer team imports Pele for a cold $6 million while Broadway Joe sits back mumbling "hurt knees, hurt knees" and collects his $2 million. And still, the poor beer — top popping fans fill the stadiums on their last $2 dollars.

Back at Spartan Stadium the alumni file into the reserved — seat bleachers smugly in J.W. Dant flasks, totally oblivious that Burt and his gang might have used illicit tactics in the ever-building desire to capture the Big Ten title and be off to the Rose Bowl.

But Burt would not be where he is if society's values were not where they are. This is the society that still fills the stadiums (386,237 spectators in Spartan Stadium last season), that buys the tickets that fattens the athletic scholarship funds ($228,357.97 to the Ralph Young Fund last year) that sponsors the game programs that keeps the football kicking every Saturday afternoon.

Our whole society is transforming from a child-orientated society to a sports-orientated one. Instead of valuing family and honesty and Mom's cherry pie, the primary moneymakers and member society, the adult males, forego all when a football game blasts out of the tube. Meanwhile, the cherry pie unbaked and Mom hauls the kids to McDonald's. Their entire day centers around this televised football game.

Then these same adults drag into Monday morning and write out a check for their old college team. The people that make football the great white god that it is.

Blame not the massive — aged athletes for they have merely played the game according to the rules, which is more their coaches can claim.

Blame not the coaches, for they are puppets seeking the power and the glow of the kingdom of sports.

Take a look in your own backyard to blame.

Sex difference

I have discovered yet another case of discrimination against women, which involves wanton waste of energy and water on the part of the University.

During the break between spring and summer terms I was waiting for the elevator in the Chemistry Building. I was surprised to hear the gush of a flush from the men's restroom three times in the space of about five minutes. No one had gone in — no one came out.

Since I am curious by nature I asked a male member of the department, and was informed that the urinals in the men's rooms in the building flush automatically every three to four minutes. My son informs me it can be a rather startling experience.

There are three urinals per room, and five floors, which makes a total of 15 urinals flushing every three minutes, 24 hours a day. At this rate each would flush 480 times a day and 15 would flush 7,200 times a day!! I believe it requires roughly ten gallons of water per flush — 72,000 gallons per day!!

It amazed me that the male members of society are not required to flush their own urinals. Of course this could be construed as a compliment to us women — we at least have the intelligence and strength to push the flush lever.

VIEWPOINT: ELECTION SCANDAL

Attack on India ignores truth

By N.S. YADAV

Michael McConnell in his June 20 article "Mrs. Gandhi's Fate Unjust" has labored to show his hatred for India under Mrs. Gandhi. I am surprised that so much can go as journalism. One needs to press for the truth.

What has India, an infant nation struggling for a meaningful existence with an economy sagging under the quadrupling of foreign food and oil prices, got to offer the world? Maybe not oil or food or military bases to any big power, but I think still a lot.

I doubt if Mr. McConnell knows who won the Davis Cup in tennis last year. For India, winning the Davis Cup is what it is for MSU to win the Rose Bowl. Last year India got its first chance ever to win the cup when it entered the finals. The only minor hurdle between it and the cup was South Africa.

But India sacrificed its dream by boycotting the match with South Africa, a country where a dying black man cannot be taken in an ambulance next to him because it is meant for whites.

I thought the boycott was a refreshing news item. But many others hate to see Gandhi, a poor nation, speak out with such conviction and courage.

If Goa did not belong to India, whom did it belong to? The Portuguese? If the people of Sikkim vote three to one to abolish the monarchy and become a full state of India, is that military intervention by India? If India liberated the people of Bangladesh and unburdened itself of the 10 million — odd refugees living on its scarce resources, was it because of India's intent of dismembering Pakistan? No country can wrench away a part of another country and get away with it — and that "wrenched away" part gets recognition by most major countries, including the United States in a few months.

India's nuclear program is vast and geared to its desperate energy needs, the nuclear explosion of last year being only a side development. I agree that its usefulness is questionable and that India technically can develop nuclear weapons. But it is still the only nuclear country which has officially pledged not to do so.

It is the old nuclear club which is making a farce of the nonproliferation treaty and exploding hundreds of tests (some even in the atmosphere) while pointing its fingers at the threat of a single underground Indian test. That is hypocrisy, as are all other charges of Mr. McConnell.

Furthermore, unlike Mr. McConnell, I think that Mrs. Gandhi has led India forcefully for about a decade, but again unlike him I don't think it would be an injustice if the Indian Supreme Court removes her from office for violation of the law of the land. Agreed, Mrs. Gandhi's charges are minor, but if they would not raise eyebrows here it is simply because they are legal practices here.

Mr. McConnell's moralism seems to say that an elected person is above the law by virtue of being the "will of the people" might as well be saying that the removal of Mr. Nixon from office was a negation of the will of the American people since he had the office with such an overwhelming majority.

Mr. McConnell, it is this kind of "standard" moralism of yours which some people more equal than others, laws more just than others, and by you can overlook the "relatively" transgressions of the West and denigrate India as the "most sanctimonious, premeditated and hypocritical country in the world bar none." But I agree with you on point: "selective blindness seems to be characteristic of extreme moralists where, not just in India." You are a part of your own diagnosis.

Secrecy gets public OK

By what weird process have skeptical Americans, who once thought Mr. Dooley and Will Rogers had the last word on politics, come to regard "government information," particularly when it is "classified government information," as sacred?

Almost any voter will tell you, after all, that politicians are crooks, or at least clowns and snake-oil salesmen. Yet, even in the wake of Watergate and Agnew and the infinite deceptions of the Vietnam years, let one of those supposedly tricky politicians become a government official and classify a document, and those supposedly cynical voters begin bowing and scraping before his rubber stamp. Let one of those reputed clowns merely whisper "national security" and otherwise sensible Americans put their fingers in their ears and close their eyes.

Look what's happened just in recent weeks, with scarcely a peep of protest from anyone:

The House Armed Services Committee has voted to deny access to secret information to Rep. Michael Harrington of Massachusetts, because it was Harrington who disclosed secret testimony last year that the CIA had conducted covert operations against the legitimate government of Salvador Allende Gossens in Chile.

When the Rockefeller Commission made its report on illegal domestic activities, it recommended nothing more stringent to stop such irregularities than presidential admonishments and congressional oversight. But the commission recommended that it be made a statutory offense, subject to criminal penalties, for any CIA employee ever to disclose classified information obtained while he worked for the CIA. No exception was made for disclosing classified information that might concern illegal CIA activities.

Pending in the Senate, with both liberal and conservative support, and under the aegis of the Ford Administration, which inherited it from the Nixon Administration, is S. 1, a bill to reclassify the federal criminal laws. The law — reaching and complex legislation would provide at least the following new restrictions on public knowledge:

•Make journalists liable to criminal penalties for possessing or publishing the contents of any government report without official permission.

•Make journalists liable to criminal penalties for receiving and publishing virtually any "national security" information without government authorization.

•Make present or former government employees liable to criminal penalties if they give to the press, without approval of their superiors, any classified information, including material about officials who violate the law, lie to the public or take secret action contrary to official policies.

All this would have effectively prevented press disclosures of the Watergate scandals and the Pentagon Papers. Yet, the Supreme Court has moved in the same direction, albeit tacitly, by refusing to review an appeals court ruling upholding the CIA's censorship of a book by a former CIA employee. The ruling imposed a lifetime prior restraint on the author's right of free speech respecting information obtained while he worked for the CIA, and asserted that he could not disclose information the CIA considered classifiable, whether or not it was classified, or even if he had learned it from other sources after leaving the agency.

Atty. Gen. Edward Levi, in a speech covering the general subject of government information and its disclosure, seemed to argue more insistently for the government's right to keep secrets than for the public's right to know what its government is doing. Moreover, as Nicholas M. Hays of the New York Times has pointed out, public response to various CIA investigations and to the Rockefeller report suggest that a substantial number of people believe these inquiries already have gone too far and that they endanger "national security."

Even the leading newspapers, whose duty is to publish what they know in protection of the First Amendment, quiesced in the CIA's appeals not to the extraordinary Glomar Explorer despite the repeated Watergate disclosures of how cynically government officials up to Nixon himself were willing to irresponsibly or mistakenly or criminally violate under the dark cloak of "national security."

No item in this sad catalogue is depressing than the House committee to penalize Michael Harrington for alerting the public to CIA excesses. That vote blow to the tradition — never as strong as deep as it should be in this country — speaking one's conscience against arbitrary restrictions. It undercuts Congress' own need for information concerning officials about inefficiently misdeeds in the executive branch, bolstered the Administration's power to undertake clandestine operations and other governments without the known or approval of Congress, let alone the public.

It was a vote that valued conformity, conscience and mocked the very idea of Congressional "oversight" of secret government.

It? noisy air conditioners not violations of privacy

JEFF MERRELL
State News Staff Writer

Ray, who lives in the East Lansing City Hall, has caused an uproar for at least one city councilman.

Ray, who lives in the East Lansing City Hall, has caused an uproar for at least one city councilman.

looks, during the Memorial Day weekend.

Bob Jipson, director of the city department of building and zoning, ruled that the noise did not constitute a violation of the housing code, though he termed the pertinent passage "a rather vague statement."

The part of the code in question states that "privacy shall mean the existence of conditions which will permit a person or persons to carry out an activity commenced without interruption or interference, either by sight or sound, by unwanted persons."

Jipson also said that the noise was not objectionable.

"I didn't hear all three of them run, but I did hear one and it wasn't that loud, Jipson said.

Roger Clark, manager of College Manor, said one other tenant had complained of the noise, but only Ray was persistent.

"I sympathize with him in a way because the inside apartments (where Ray lives) were pretty quiet," he said.

Clark said the city "seems to be powerless" to do anything because of the loosely worded housing code.

"It's a mountain out of a molehill yet it's a valid complaint," Clark said.

Ray said the noise is bothersome.

"It's loud enough when you have to live with it," Ray said.

"They're lined up beautifully to echo the noise and reverberate," he added. "You come home from work, you're tired, and you want to go to sleep and these things are going."

Ray said he still thinks the units are in violation of the housing code and that Jipson's ruling was wrong.

"Pretty much what I think he was telling me was to shut up and live there," he said.

Ray's options include appealing Jipson's decision to the Housing Appeals Board, or getting an agreement from John Caywood, who owns the building, to submit the complaint to the Housing Commission for arbitration.

Caywood, however, said he will not submit to arbitration and that Ray is the only one that has made a complaint.

"Out of 26 tenants in the building, he's the only one that contacted me," Caywood said.

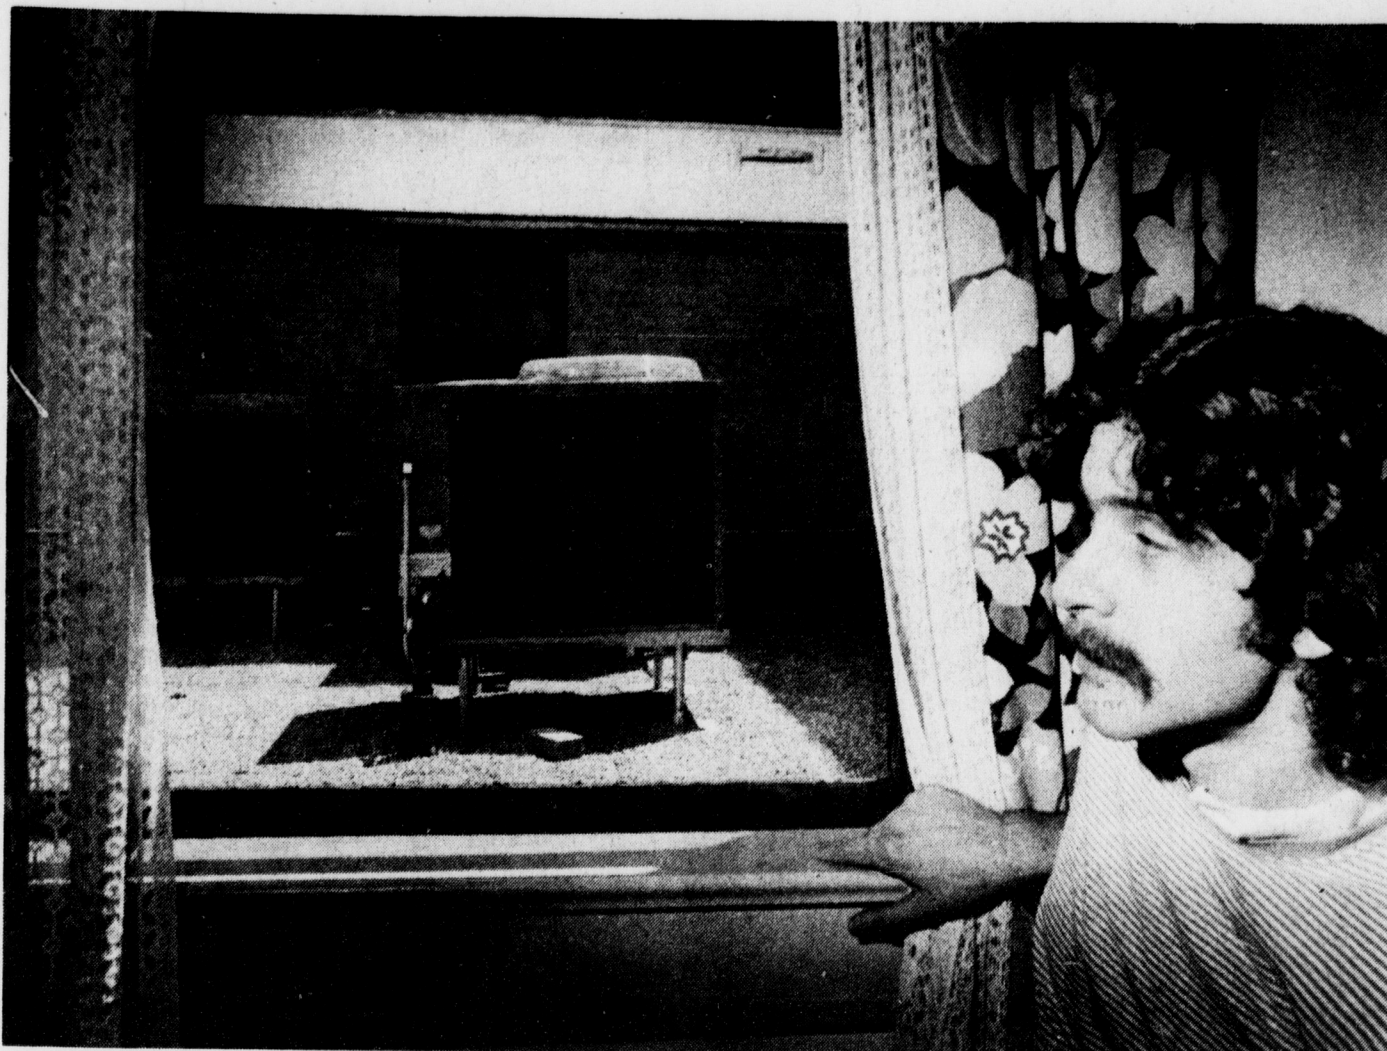

Caywood added that he is caught in the middle of the entire affair.

"I've got a major tenant in Beggars Banquet, and they're super guys. I'm not about to get in a contest with them," he said.

Jay Alpert, general manager of Beggars, and Chuck Rose, a part owner, both said they had a hard time talking to Ray about the trouble, and had to install a vandal-proof lock on the on-off switch of the units to prevent Ray from shutting them off himself. He already has tried it once.

"He's lucky he didn't get blown all the way down to Lum's," Rose said about the tampering.

Alpert added that the company that installed the units placed them in the positions they are in because of structural limitations of the roof, and the plumbing and wiring systems of the building.

Cliff Ray has what he thinks is a problem sitting outside his window. Trouble is, the people at City Hall do not think the same way and it may be that the difference of opinion can be traced to a vague passage in the city housing code.

POLICE BRIEFS

Lightning struck Cherry Lane Apartments Tuesday, starting a fire which caused about $1,500 damage.

Lightning apparently traveled along the building's network of girders after entering through an open vent window or the roof, according to the report submitted by the East Lansing Dept.

There were no injuries and all smoke and fire damages were confined to the attic.

A blaze was reported at 2:54 p.m. Twelve firemen responded.

Extension courses increasing

By PEGGY GOSSETT
State News Staff Writer

Enrollment in MSU extension courses reached an all-time high in the 1974-75 school year, with a total of 23,322 students surpassing the 1973-74 total of 21,406.

Extension courses, part of MSU Continuing Education Services, are designed to enable people off-campus to complete courses in addition to or towards their degree.

Both credit and noncredit courses were offered last year at 127 locations, from the majestic fountains of Cranbrook School in Bloomfield Hills to the piers of Marquette and as far south as Mexico.

Only two years ago, 85 locations were listed as offering courses and last year the number jumped to 116 locations.

Jim Anderson, director for student employment at MSU, said not only has the tight job market caused many people to take classes, but that many students opt to work part-time and supplement their degree with part-time extension courses.

"People have more free time on their hands and fill it up with some of these courses," he said.

Anderson said the high enrollment on campus, as well as off, was due in part to lack of sufficient jobs.

Except for the upper level courses in education held in Mexico City, Monterey and Pueblo, Mexico, only three states outside Michigan offered extension courses. The Mississippi band of Choctaw Indians worked with MSU students in Philadelphia, Miss., in an Education 484 class. A course in developmental physical education was held as a noncredit seminar in both Boise, Idaho, and Orleans, N.Y.

These varied sites also contributed to the record high of 1,184 total courses held in 1974-75 up from 1,101 the previous year.

Most of the courses offered through extension services were for MSU credit. Only 126 noncredit courses were listed, with 7,059 students enrolled, while 1,024 credit courses enrolled 16,263 students.

The use of telecasting credit courses via the University's WKAR-TV was reviewed this year after a five-year break. The "University of the Air" telecast five credit and five noncredit courses this past winter and spring terms.

The courses offered winter and spring terms of this year over WKAR-TV were Anthropology of Japanese Culture; Civilizations, a Great Issues course on the Ascent of Man, and an introduction to the application of computers. Any regular UHF television set can pick up these courses.

These televised courses are different from the University's own closed-circuit television station, which broadcasts for the televised sections of specific courses.

"The use of television for credit courses was not active for those five years because there was not enough air time available to them," said Fay Elizabeth Smith, director of University of the Air.

WKAR was only the third broadcasting station in the country to go on the air as an educational, nonprofit station, Smith said.

The Nearly-perfect Loudspeaker

Once upon a time (5 years ago) a particular speaker manufacturer (Advent) had the colossal gall to build a loudspeaker that was significantly superior to any other loudspeaker ever made in its price range. They also declared:

ADVENT

•That the Advent loudspeaker deserved to be ranked among the finest of loudspeakers, with overall performance at least equal in every audible respect of the most expensive speakers available.

•That the Advent would sell for half the average cost of speakers now generally considered the best available.

•That the Advent loudspeaker would produce enough output at low distortion to permit listening to music at loud levels even in a large listening room.

We at HI-FI BUYS have agreed from the beginning that Advent has fulfilled these claims.

In order to allow YOU to judge whether or not these claims are true, we have installed a unique speaker comparison device in our audio room. This unit in no way alters the bass or treble quality of the speakers connected to it. It simply enables you to compare speakers with varying efficiencies at the same level. Only with this kind of comparison can you hear and evaluate all the characteristics of the speakers you are considering, then on the basis of concrete information... make a rational choice.

YOU, the customer, finally become a participant in the speaker selection process instead of a mere observer.

We at HI FI BUYS invite you to bring in your favorite album and listen to it on the Advent loudspeaker, furthermore, we invite the comparison of any loudspeaker to those manufactured by Advent!

Come on in... You'll like what you hear!

Summer theater beginning series

By SUSAN CARNEY

The annual free outdoor summer theater series, sponsored by the MSU Theater Dept., begins July 2 and will run Wednesday through Saturday nights at 8:30 in the Kresge courtyard through July 26. In past years the varied productions and unique setting have attracted hundreds of people.

This summer the Company has decided to put on all classical plays. The line-up includes "Taming of the Shrew," July 2 through 5; "View from the Bridge," July 9 through 12; "The Rivals," July 16 through 19, and a special version of "Sophocles and Antigone," July 23 through 26.

Rutledge said that the Theater Dept. has been producing plays on campus since 1961 but in 1970 ran out of money after hiring its summer staff.

"Since we didn't have any money to invest in costumes and scenery, we decided to take them out of storage and do the plays for free," he said.

He added that the first time they put on a production they were amazed at its success.

"I had told the directors not to be too upset if people just walked up, looked for awhile and then walked away," he said. "But we ended up bringing in baseball bleachers to handle the crowd."

Rutledge added that he hoped they would be as lucky as they were last summer and not have any of the productions rained out.

"If it does rain we'll just have to fold up and go home," he said.

He also emphasized that this series is absolutely free to the public.

"In a way, it's the Theater Dept. and University's summer present to the public for having supported us all year," he said.

Frank C. Rutledge, chairman of the Theater Dept., said that this series, known as the Summer Circle Free Festival, is entirely supported by the provost's office, the MSU Development Fund and the Michigan Council for the Arts.

Book stirs baseball nostalgia

By G. F. KORRECK

State News Staff Writer
Craters never could handle an inside fast ball — or an outside one for that matter — and I will never forget the time he chased Charlie down the street in his '62 Rambler, trying desperately to run him over as Charlie darted through the trees towards home.

We were 15 or 16 then, and though we wouldn't know it for a year or two, we had already passed through a portion of our lives as irretrievable as an errant relay gobbled up by a sewer or a ground rule double through the only window in the only house in right field.

It was a time when the Everly Brothers were still big on Ed Sullivan, JFK was proclaiming himself a Berliner and the last vestiges of the '50s, as aptly portrayed in the film American Graffiti, were still kicking. Recent trips home remind me that the field where we played is no longer owned by the creamery — which is no longer a creamery — and that prefab houses now line the base paths. Nostalgia lives in somebody's flower bed and our dreams of greatness are forever buried in concrete.

Bubble gum book

These images — and many more like them — are why I can appreciate a book like Brendan C. Boyd and Fred Harris's "The Great American Baseball Card Flipping, Trading and Bubble Gum Book."

Reading the bubble gum book is like remembering waking from half-sleep on a cool July morning, knowing all you had to do that day was grab your glove, hop on your bike and ride a few blocks for a day-long baseball game.

Boyd and Harris, both Bostonians, capture the essence of that time in precisely the best way possible. They do not chase it nor do they dredge up elements of the period that nostalgia buffs may soon need a thesaurus to comprehend. The book is about baseball and about baseball players. Pure and simple.

Pleasant ambiguity

There are no claims made regarding accuracy, truth or fairness and little, if any, order to the procession of images that bombard the reader with the pleasant ambiguity of bitter-sweet memory. Far and away the best stuff in the bubble gum book is the more than 200 color photos of baseball cards — from the very early 1950s to the early 1960s — and the usually caustic thumbnail sketches that go with them.

The book seems like it should have particular relevance to Michiganders, assuming those who read it were at one time Tiger fans, as the authors develop the sense of frustration inherent in their Red Sox rooting days. As any 1950s fan will attest, the Tigers and Red Sox are prime choices for consistent mediocre play for the time period.

Diamond duds

The authors' delightful cynicism spills over into unabashed bemoaning of such diamond duds as Dave Nicholson, a one-time Baltimore bonus baby, who the authors claim never belonged in the major leagues. Nicholson, looking uncharacteristically menacing in his portrait, struck out 175 times in 1963, once every 2.6 times at bat.

Boyd and Harris also inform readers that Hector Lopez, a Kansas City Athletic and New York Yankee alumnus, was not a bad fielder for a ballplayer; rather, he was a bad fielder for a human being.

Not all the pitches are high and tight, however, as the book includes the memory of Harry Agganis, a promising Red Sox first baseman who died of leukemia at age 25, and Herb Score, who would have broken the monotony between Bob Feller and Sandy Koufax had he not been struck in the eye with a line drive.

There are others whose names and exploits are mentioned here, but it is more fun to pore across them yourself than to be told about them. The authors also seem adept at choosing the most representative portrait of each player.

1950s recollections
There is a degree of historical significance to the bubble gum book, though the authors claim their efforts pursued no distinct purpose, such as a beginning often delightful recollections of boyhood in the '50s. Stuff such as how you knew which cards to trade and when, how tough it was to get guys like Ted Beard or Toby Atwell — players most big league managers regarded with the anonymity they earned — and, of course, the cultural environment within which the pursuit of the baseball card blossomed. Every now and then, a paragraph filled with great names from the 1950s pops out to keep the mood intact.

The authors even went so far as to interview Sy Berger, head of the Topps Chewing Gum Sports Dept., to provide a not uninteresting sketch of a man who agrees with their assessment of the best job in the world.

But words cannot really describe the book as well as reading it can. It is not really a book for words.

Just fun

It is just fun — something you have in your hand on a hot day when you are drinking one of those fountain cokes that are always too sweet and make you sick afterwards; something you would pick up after cursing Pete Burnside for walking in Norm Zauchin with the winning run in the bottom of the ninth.

I have already gone back to it several times to study the faces that I picked up candy wrappers and O-So bottles to purchase — faces I guarded from thieves like Pretzelhead Reynolds and Clarkie Majewski. Faces that cause me to wonder if Charlie ever learned how to do anything more than dodge Ramblers or if Craters ever married the girl he knocked out and if he raised a houseful of kids with terminal acne.

On the last page, the book says, "Good night Sibby Sisti, wherever you are," better way to end, or ber, an era?

Woman fakes own kidnapping

BENTON HARBOR (UPI) — The FBI said Thursday an Indiana woman faked her kidnapping in order to get the weekend with her friend.

Susan Boer, 22, walked to a police station in Benton Harbor Monday and told authorities she had been abducted days earlier from the car she attends in Illinois. FBI agents in Benton Harbor said the woman admitted the story was a hoax after a 10-hour stay in the alleged kidnapping was supposed to occur.

Boer told the FBI she up the story so she could away with her boyfriend for weekend.

'Funny Girl' sequel lacks original zest

By FRANK FOX
State News Reviewer

Do we really need the movie 'Funny Lady'?

No. "Funny Lady," the continuation of Barbra Streisand's musical portrayal of the life of entertainer Fanny Brice has all the limitations usually associated with film sequels.

Characterizations are overextended and shallow. Allusions to the original production are so numerous that they are embarrassing.

Such is the case of "Funny Lady," a film whose strong points are ultimately overshadowed by the tenuous nature of a story and characterization which have been stretched dangerously thin.

Producer Ray Stark, who was in charge of "Funny Girl" both in the film and Broadway stage versions, seems to have run out of steam in this particular vehicle. Along with Stark from the first film are Director Herbert Ross, who directed the musical numbers in the film version of "Funny Girl," and stars Streisand and Omar Sharif. The spate of songs by Billy Rose, John Kander and Fred Ebb promised enough vocals for even the most ardent Streisand fan.

Yet "Funny Lady" essentially fails. Much of the blame must rest on the screenplay by Jay Presson Allen and Arnold Schulman, who failed to recapture the magic of the infectious plot of "Funny Girl," and with director Ross, who did not smoothly integrate the musical numbers with the jagged and overwritten story line.

Which is too bad, for elements in "Funny Lady" could have contributed to a fine film, had they not been coupled with the superficialities and production excesses which mount up with increasing obviousness.

For instance—a particularly abominable moment—Streisand, as Fanny Brice, at last reunites with Omar Sharif, as her ex-husband Nick Arnstein. This incident, near the end of the film, is a critical point, since the torch Brice had carried for Arnstein since the end of "Funny Girl" is an important thematic element in "Funny Lady."

They meet. They embrace. They kiss. Then someone—nobody should claim credit for this—flings an awfully overdone refrain from "People" into the soundtrack as they kiss. The music at this point is so overpowering that what should have served as a subtle reminder of the lovers' theme song becomes a ludicrous cliché gratuitously tossed into the audience's lap.

This is but one of several allusions that clearly attempt to draw moviegoers back to the sentimental appeal and charm of "Funny Girl." The multiple references to the original border on mere copying.

Another of the most glaring of these is a mawkish repeat of the well-known "Don't Rain on My Parade" tugboat sequence from "Funny Girl." This time, Streisand's upbeat, optimistic song is called "Let's Hear It For Me" and she uses a quaint airplane instead of a tugboat to frantically pursue the man she unwisely loves.

Barbra Streisand's Oscar-winning interpretation of Fanny Brice suffers as well. Though her voice is fine and her comedic timing sharp, one more round of the sarcastic, vulnerable Ms. Brice is just too much. Streisand's performance is the image of an image of an image—a tried and true formula that has been milked of the last drop of pathos.

And Omar Sharif? He appears briefly in an uncomfortable shadow of what was a rather shadowy role in the first place.

New to this chapter of the "Funny" tale is James Caan, who portrays showbusiness entrepreneur, Billy Rose, Brice's second love.

Caan plays Rose as an uncouth, greedy, fast-talking hustler with just enough charm to overcome his basically repulsive personality—most of the time. Caan's performance inspires an odd combination of distaste and sympathy.

But the relationship between Brice and Rose is ill-developed and episodic. Director Herbert Ross expects viewers to assume too much of what he has left unstated since he no more than brings the pair together before he parts them. One vainly searches for the point.

Ross, despite the weakness of his control at some points, really shines in the numerous musical stage numbers which he also directed. These carefully executed performances are finely wrought tributes to the lavishly overstated and joyously pretentious musical/dance revues of the 1930s.

The "Clap Hands Here Comes Charley" sequence with Ben Vereen and the hilariously chaotic "Crazy Quilt" scenes do much to redeem the film. Also noteworthy is an exquisitely vulgar aquatic ballet routine that epitomizes the avaricious bad taste of Caan's Billy Rose.

The costumes by Ray

Aghayan and Bob Mackie are definitely assets as is the fine photographic work directed by two-time Oscar winner, James Wong Howe.

There is almost enough of real value in this film to recommend it. But don't expect another "Funny Girl," for producer Ray Stark has gone to the well one time too many.

Vintage vehicles vying

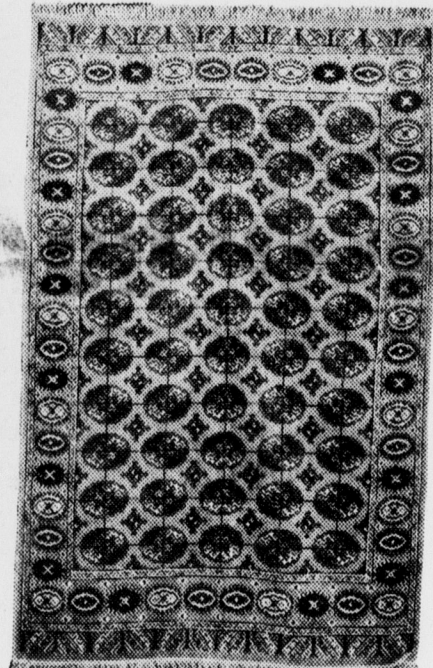

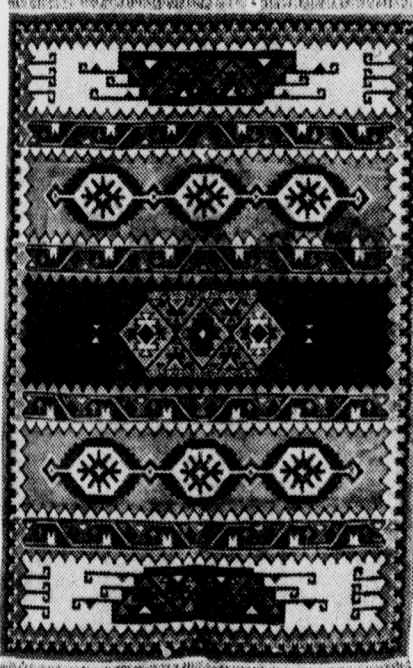

Antique and classic Olds and Reo cars will be on display on the busy area just east of Harrison Road and South of Kalamazoo Street from 1 to 4:30 p.m. Saturday and from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday.

Admission to each day's events will be $1. The cars will be displayed and judged for national awards during the combined meeting of the Oldsmobile Club of America and the Reo Club of America which is currently being held at the Kellogg Center.

Any antique car owner may bring his or her vehicle and display on Sunday.

THE DEPOT RELIVES THE OLD DAYS

Not only can you hear the whistle blowing, but you can also hear the bells clanging and the lights flashing when the trains clamor by the Depot Restaurant.

Actually, aside from the whistle, the rest is staged, produced, and managed by The Depot's owner, Vince Malmangi. The effect, though, is real to life.

Two years ago, Malmangi revamped the railroad station that has been standing for over 70 years at 1203 S. Washington, Lansing, turning it into one of Michigan's showcase railroad restaurants.

Patrons receive their first taste of the gay 90's hospitality when they are greeted at the front door with a "welcome Aboard" sign. From there on in, it's a trip down nostalgic Main Street.

The waitresses are adorned in granny dresses, and old-fashioned music plays in the background. The salad bar in an antique baggage cart and a wigwag crossing signal standing in the corner also help set the stage.

The most precious of all the antiques in the Depot are three 60 year-old Standard Oil crowns from the tops of gasoline pumps. Boiler gauges from ancient steam engines are hung on the wall above the bar. A warning signal flashes from the back wall to heighten the effect.

Dining at The Depot brings back fond memories of the old neighborhood where the tempo of life was slower and patrons could sit, relax, and exchange the latest pieces of gossip. If those days were before your time, here's a chance to experience the way it was.

With leaded glass windows dating back 100 years bordering the dining area, customers can enjoy a moderately priced dinner in booths constructed from authentic railroad benches.

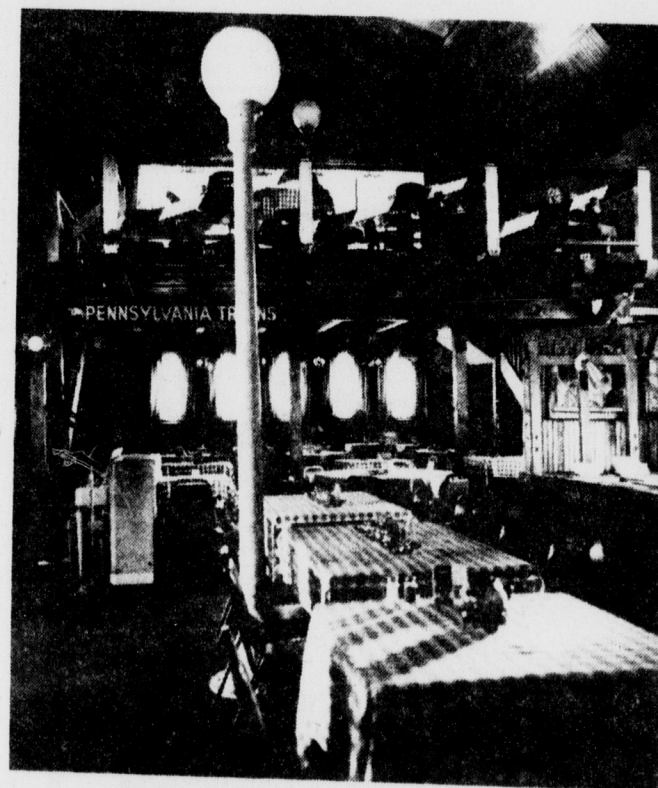

The Depot's menu, printed on a large facsimile of a Grand Trunk Western railroad baggage check, offers dinners for the entire family.

"We're a family oriented restaurant in a unique building," said Malmangi.

The menu has items ranging from onion rings and wine, to crablegs and strip sirloins. Specialties are anything from seafood and steaks to spaghetti and fresh garden greens from the salad bar.

Sunday specials at reduced prices include spaghetti, fried shrimp, or fried chicken with the salad bar accompanying each dinner.

Popular priced items include the choice N.Y. strip steak for just $7.50 including the salad bar, the chicken dinner for $4.95 and the overwhelming spaghetti dinner with salad bar for just $3.50.

The Depot is open every day with a special luncheon menu.

There have been no corners cut, nor a single detail spared to provide "passengers" of The Depot with an authentic atmosphere. The same care has been taken in providing reasonable prices on both menu items and drinks. Making you noon and evening meals a thoroughly enjoyable and memorable experience is what The Depot is all about.

HEW clarifies proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Caspar W. Weinberger, secretary of health, education and welfare, said today that recent anti-sex discrimination regulations in sports do not require equal expenditures for each sex or for male and female teams.

Weinberger said the goal of the regulations is "to secure equal opportunity for men and women while allowing schools and colleges flexibility in determining how best to provide such opportunity." He reviewed the controversial regulations implementing the 1972 education act for the House post-secondary education subcommittee.

Weinberger began by describing what he said the regulations do not require — equal aggregate expenditures for members of each sex or for male and female teams.

Neither do they require two separate, equal facilities for every sport, he said, nor will they result in the dissolution of athletic programs.

And, he continued, the regulations do not require equal money for athletic scholarships, coeducational showers, locker-rooms or toilet facilities and do not require women to play football with men.

Weinberger said a college can provide separate teams for males and females or, if it wishes, a single team open to both sexes when selection for a team is based on competitive skill or if the activity involves physical contact.

If separate teams are offered, a school may not discriminate on the basis of sex in providing necessary equipment or supplies or in any other way, he said.

"I emphasize again that equal aggregate expenditures are not required," he said. "In determining whether equal opportunities are available such factors as the following will be considered:

"Whether the available sports reflect the interests and abilities of both sexes; provision of supplies and equipment; game and practice schedules; travel and per diem allowances, etc."

He said where a team in a noncontact sport is offered for members of one sex and not for members of the other, individuals of that sex must be allowed to compete for the team offered.

Top superstars compete locally

Some of the best local athletes will gather at the Brandywine Creek Apartment complex this Saturday to prove who is the best all-around performer in the bunch.

The 10-event Superstar competition will feature many former MSU standouts with all proceeds from the event going to the MSU Ralph Young Fund.

Some of the competing athletes are Earl Morrall, Bill Simpson, Brad VanPelt, Norm Cash, Herb Orvis and Steve Keely.

The 10 events that the superstars will be competing in are rowing, tennis, basketball accuracy, football throw, weightlifting, 60-yard dash, half-mile run, pocket billiards, putting and obstacle course. Each athlete must compete in seven events and cannot compete in his regular sport.

The show will begin at 8 a.m. and will continue to about 5 p.m. Saturday. There will also be a special exhibition football throw involving Earl Morrall, Jimmy Raye and Charlie Baggett at 9:45 a.m. All three have quarterbacked MSU football squads — Morrall in 1955, Raye in 1965 and Baggett in 1975.

Terry Braverman, director of the Ralph Young Fund, said it should be an interesting competition and that they are hoping for a good turnout. Admission is $1 and Brandywine Creek is located at the north end of Hagadorn Road in East Lansing.

House eyes strict drug law

By MORNA MOORE

Proposed legislation calling for mandatory sentencing of heroin and wiretap law, is the subject of current House Judiciary Committee hearings.

Paul Rosenbaum, D-Battle Creek, the committee chairman, said that an influx of heroin into the state prompted the proposal.

The law enforcement has not been tried before and maybe it's time it were," Rosenbaum said.

Rosenbaum said the proposals are aimed at putting the top dealers of hard drugs out of business.

"That's the only way to turn off the faucet," he said.

The wiretap draft, as it is being referred to in the house, promises to be the most controversial of the proposals. It would allow the placement of electronic surveillance devices in private places without the knowledge of at least one of the persons engaged in the conversations which would be monitored.

The draft includes authorization for law enforcement officers to secretly enter a private place to install, operate or maintain the electronic surveillance device.

Authorization to install such a device would have to be obtained through the State Court of Appeals, therefore limiting abuse of the law, Rosenbaum said.

A second draft would impose mandatory life sentences, with no eligibility for parole or sentence reduction for good behavior, in cases of possession of a kilogram (about 2.2 pounds) of a controlled narcotic, specifically heroin.

According to Rosenbaum, there are no other laws which eliminate parole or time off for good behavior.

The committee met Monday evening to hear testimony and consider amendments presented by law enforcement officers, lawyers and others connected with narcotics abuse.

Mark Rilling, American Civil Liberties Union legislative co-chairman, expressed concern that the wiretap law would allow law enforcement officers to go on "a fishing expedition" even though the proposal restricts circumstances under which the surveillance devices may be installed.

Rilling also said that past experiences with wiretaps, although costly, have resulted in few arrests.

Lt. Roger L. Warner, representing the Michigan State Police Dept. testified in favor of the proposal, specifically the section dealing with wiretaps.

"It would be effective in getting to the major dealers," Warner said. "The bill will give us a tool."

Heroin ruled taxable commodity in case of Detroit drug dealer

WIRE SERVICES

DETROIT — A state agency ruled that a convicted dealer owes back sales tax for purchases made by him over the last three years.

The Board of Tax Appeals says Eddie "Big Man" Jackson of Southfield owes the state about $1 million, or 4 per cent of the $24 million he is alleged to have received from selling heroin.

Legal authorities called the ruling unusual and perhaps unprecedented.

The state board said Jackson, 31, should have done what all other Michigan business do — collect a 4 per cent sales tax on the purchase price in the alleged heroin sales and turn it over to the state.

Jackson was convicted last July along with 11 other persons charged with conspiracy to manufacture and distribute heroin and cocaine.

Sentenced to 20 years in prison last October, he is currently free on $100,000 bond pending appeal.

Authorities estimated that Jackson, described as one of Detroit's major drug dealers, sold $24 million worth of heroin from Jan. 1, 1969, through Dec. 31, 1972.

The sales tax applies to a wide range of consumer goods, but this apparently is the first time tax authorities have applied it to illegal narcotics sales.

The board said Jackson failed to produce books and records and did not argue with its assessment. Therefore, it ruled, he owes the tax.

Under Michigan law, if a person cannot disprove a claimed debt to the state, he must pay it.

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley Thursday opposed congressional proposals to prohibit wiretapping, bugging and proposals would have a crippling impact.

Under the proposals, court orders permitting such activities would have to be based on the probability of the commission of crimes.

Kelley took his opposition before the House civil liberties subcommittee, which disclosed that 190 wiretaps and 42 bugs were used in 1974 without court orders.

Chairman Robert W. Kastenmeier, D-Wis., said that contrasted to the 163 which were used the year before.

On Monday, a U.S. Appeals Court decided that no government agency could use warrantless wiretaps on domestic organizations without a court order. The case had been brought to the court by the Jewish Defense League, a New York - based Zionist organization which was bugged by the Justice Dept. in 1970 and 1973.

On Wednesday, Atty. Gen. Edward H. Levi insisted, despite the court decision, that he had the right to authorize wiretaps, without court warrants, against domestic groups planning unlawful activity against foreign countries or political organizations.

Levi turned down the subcommittee's request for the identities of the persons under surveillance by government agencies, the identities of the agencies requesting the wiretaps and bugs and samples of transcripts obtained.

Kelley told the subcommittee the proposals it was considering would drastically curtail the intelligence function of the executive branch of the government.

His main opposition was to a bill sponsored by 70 House members who would prohibit any wiretapping, bugging, surreptitious entry and opening of mail or private records without a court order obtained with evidence that a crime has been or is about to be committed.

Kelley said this would prevent the FBI from investigating foreign intelligence activities in this country unless it could prove that a crime has occurred or is imminent.

He said the FBI must be able to follow foreign agents and gather intelligence to enable the President to protect the nation against foreign threats.

The President cannot wait until these very serious threats become clear violations of federal law before taking protective action, Kelley said.

He suggested, however, that he might favor what he described as court rulings proposing establishment of a special judicial panel to approve all wiretaps for national security without requiring that a crime be imminent.

Airplane crash

DETROIT (UPI) — A small private aircraft owned by an Indiana flying club crashed as it approached for a landing at Detroit City Airport Thursday, killing all four persons on board and critically injuring a 7-year-old boy mowing a lawn.

Courselector accuracy, funding mullied by University because it is inaccurate in parts.

"The present issue was not supervised at all by faculty members," she said. "In the future, we will assist in the task of gathering and compiling accurate course information."

Raymond said that mounds of bureaucratic red tape had to be cut to compile the information for Courselector.

"We had to rely on department chairmen to forward questionnaires to faculty members," he said.

"Some cooperated and some didn't. The result is that some departments are over-represented while others don't have any listings at all."

Courselector lists 13 of 108 undergraduate English courses. It does not include any listings from the journalism and chemistry departments which offer 24 and 45 courses respectively at the undergraduate level.

Students can pick Courselectors up at the ASMSU offices in the Student Services Building. During registration, they will also be available at the men's IM Building and the Union.

Raymond and four other students began work on the guide in December and they did not finish until April. Course descriptions were then sent to Boston where they were printed in magazine form.

Assistant provost Herman King said the Boston printing firm was chosen because it was the only one that could deliver the completed guide by the middle of spring term, in time for fall registration. Like Raymond, King felt the most pressing issue was to offer something to help confused students choose their courses.

Raymond said one of the main reasons he wanted to bring Courselector to MSU was to pressure the administration into providing a better means of informing students about the contents of courses.

However, Arata is opposed to Courselector because MSU students had to volunteer to do all the work on it while the Boston publishers reaped the profits from advertising sales.

Arata said that if the University decides to offer a comprehensive course guide, it would be some time before descriptions of all of MSU's 2,600 courses could be offered. In addition, nobody is sure what form future course guides will take, how often they will be offered or what courses will be covered.

"It costs money," she said. "We just don't have any loose dollars and I think we'll have fewer loose dollars next year."

Gandhi's government arrests 676 'after protests begin until her appeal was decided by the full court, which will take several months. But he refused her the full stay of sentence, ruling she could not vote in Parliament, and this touched off new demands for her resignation.

The government imposed press censorship on Indian and foreign correspondents Thursday and said they could send copy only if cleared by a censor or given out at official briefings.

Telecommunications lines from New Delhi to foreign points were down for part of the day following the emergency decree.

Dr. A. R. Baji, the government's principal information officer, said that peaceful conditions existed all over the country following the emergency proclamation, which was signed by President Fakhruddin Ali Ahmed, the constitutional head of state, on behalf of Gandhi's government.

But he said there was scattered violence, especially in Ahmedabad, the capital of central Gujarat state, where he said persons stoned buses and put up road blocks. Some tear gas shells had to be fired to quell the violence, he said.

Official sources said the central government has asked all 21 states to make full use of powers under the emergency regulations to maintain law and order.

Under the emergency proclamation, the Indian constitution's key Article 19 — similar to the American Bill of Rights — was suspended. The article contains the right of freedom of speech and expression and peaceful assembly.

The 57-year-old Gandhi, who has ruled the country since 1966, personally announced the emergency decree to the nation in a morning broadcast.

"How can any government worth the name stand by and allow the country's stability to be imperiled?" she said, referring to what she described as a deep and widespread conspiracy to undermine India.

Gandhi said she would soon announce fresh measures to strengthen the economy and to relieve the hardship of various sections, particularly the poor and vulnerable and those with fixed incomes.

She said the "conspiracy" against her government began after she started introducing "certain progressive measures of benefit to the common man and woman of India."

Her statement appeared to be a reference to her leftward shift in economic policies that began in 1969 with the nationalization of major domestic banks.

'U' officials start on fire protection plan

Siefert did not know how long it would take to update the eight buildings or install the 27 fire alarm systems but said the heavily-used classroom buildings would be done as rapidly as possible.

"Even if there was enough money to do every building at once," Siefert said. "We wouldn't be able to find enough contractors in the area to do the work."

While the process of installing the fire alarms in the 27 buildings will be lengthy and long, the expense has not yet been calculated.

A fire alarm system was installed in the computer center in 1974 for about $7,000, said Jim Peters, space utilization director.

But it is impossible to say how long it took to install the fire alarm system as it was done as part of a complete remodeling program, Peters said.

The alarm system in the computer center includes an annunciator panel. The layout of the building and each fire alarm is on the panel. When a fire alarm is pulled, it lights up one on the annunciator panel. Firemen can then tell immediately which alarm was pulled by looking at the panel.

Peters said he would like to see a similar panel installed with every new fire alarm system that is installed on campus.

Only 11 of the 27 buildings on campus without fire alarms are used for instructional use. These buildings would probably be among the first buildings to have alarms installed. These are: Anthony Hall, Agriculture Engineering, Eustace Hall, Linton Hall, Journalism Building, Horticulture Building, Marshall Hall, Cook Hall, Chittenden Hall, and Human Ecology Building. Most of these buildings were built in the late 1800s and early 1900s.

The other 16 buildings without fire alarms are business occupancy buildings.

According to Siefert, fire alarms are required by the state fire codes only if there are more than 1,000 people in the building or 200 or more below or above ground level.

These buildings are: Auditorium, Museum, Union, Central Services, Food Stores, General Stores, Grounds and Maintenance Building, Married Housing Offices, Physical Plant, Power Plant 865, Shaw Lane Power Plant, Purchasing Building, Salvage Building, Spartan Stadium pressbox, Wills House and WKAR-TV studios.

Siefert said the University has not installed fire alarms in these buildings sooner because it was preoccupied with new construction.

"We have now reached a point where we can stop and look at the older buildings and improve them," Siefert said.

But Siefert said he does not see the need for installing fire alarms in one story buildings such as the married housing office. He said he hopes the University considers it a low-priority item and does the classroom buildings and larger business-occupancy buildings first.

A report which will include the fire marshals' figures, University priority lists and rock-bottom cost estimates is being prepared by the state fire marshals' office, DPS representatives, Siefert and Jim Peters, space utilization director. The report should be ready in three to four months, according to Jack Breslin, MSU executive vice president.

'U' to convert visitor lots

will also have gates near their entrances. The gates will open when a gate-card is inserted. They will not be coin-operated.

The student traffic regulations state that it is illegal for students to park an unregistered car on campus between 4 a.m. Monday between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Students do not have to register cars if they are going to or park them on campus after hours. But many students' unregistered cars do drive them on campus and park in the visitor lots.

Campus police have found there is not enough time to prove the cars are being driven by students and cannot issue tickets for the illegal driving and parking, Bissell said.

This year, a subcommittee of the Buildings, Lands and Planning Committee studied the traffic pattern on campus. They found one of the factors contributing to the increasing traffic on campus was the growing number of unregistered cars on campus.

Bissell estimates there are about 12,000 cars on campus each year. Since July 1974, 28,411 parking permits have been issued to MSU students, faculty or staff members. About half of these sold to students.

So far this year, 8,263 more permits than the 20,148 cars parking spots available were sold. Bissell said the DPS does have the authority to stop selling the permits and will continue to sell one to anyone who needs it.

While the number of permits issued to students is higher than last year, the numbers are not as high as before when all students were required to register their cars regardless of what time they were driving on campus.

This year the campus park and planning division found more students than ever before had cars.

"I don't know if it is because they are richer or what, but we far more than our usual 10 or so overflow cars in the storage lot," said Dennis Hanson, MSU landscape architect.

The two most overcrowded student "storage lots" this year were X Lot, behind Fee Hall and F Lot, behind Holden. About 480 more permits than the 792 spaces in X Lot were sold this year. Only about 100 extra permits were sold at F Lot, where there are 688 paved spaces. The extra cars are parked on the near the lot.

There are no plans for converting any of the visitor lot student lots at the present time.

"We are trying to discourage, not encourage student driving campus," a member of AUTC said.

television screens have a phosphor coating, behind ever-Trinitron screen is a pattern of phosphor stripes; unlike a dot pattern, stripes have less space between them. So iron color beams hit more phosphor, and the picture is greater color saturation; greater clarity, brightness and intensity. The unique Sony Trinitron Color System is very bright. You'll see.
