Supreme Court OKs spanking for punishment

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Supreme Court ruled Monday that public school teachers may spank pupils, even if their parents object, but must ordinarily try some other means of punishment first.

It is also agreed to hear arguments on the power of cities to restrict the location of pornographic theaters and book stores.

The court then recessed until Nov. 3. In the corporal punishment case, the court affirmed without comment a decision of a three-judge federal court in North Carolina upholding the spanking of a sixth-grade pupil in a Gibsonville, N.C., school

The lower court held that the spanking was not a constitutionally prohibited "cruel and unusual punishment.

The child, Russell Carl Baker, was disciplined for throwing a kickball outside of designated play time. His mother had asked that he not be spanked because she was opposed to corporal punishment and because he was a frail child.

The three-judge court said that "except for those acts of misconduct which are so antisocial or disruptive in nature as to shock the conscience," a student must be warned in advance when certain behavior might bring about a spanking.

Subject to the same exception, the court said spanking "should never be employed as a first line of punishment" but the teacher should try some other means of discipline first - such as keeping the pupil after school or assigning extra work.

The lower court also required that a second teacher or principal be present when the child is spanked and that the parents be given a written statement of the reasons for the punishment if they request it.

Ed Keller, deputy executive director of the National Association of Elementary School Principals said he believed the decision would have little effect.

"Almost any school district still having in its board policy corporal punishment as a last resort would operate on those premises anyway," Keller said. "Most schools are getting away from corporal punishment."

In the pornography case, the court announced it will review a 2-1 ruling of the U.S. Circuit Court in Cincinnati striking down a Detroit ordinance. The ordinance added "adult" theaters and bookstores to a previously established category of "regulated uses" such as pawn shops, bars and pool halls.

The city decreed that such businesses could not be located within 1,000 feet of

Court case tests MSU's legal bounds

By BRAD MARTISIUS State News Staff Writer

Two students who were charged with moving a "No Parking" plank last November probably never guessed their case might have constitutional implications.

Their case involved a violation of a minor MSU ordinance but it could end up with MSU losing its power to make and enforce ordinances.

The case could go higher than 54th District Court if the prosecution loses. The questions raised involve the constitutional right of the legislature to grant ordinancemaking and enforcing powers to the board of trustees. For that reason the Ingham County prosecutor in the case, Alan Hoffman, said any decision against the prosecution would probably be appealed.

"We never realized how complex this case would get," Hoffman said. "It's a minor offense but there is a very good possibility it will go on to a higher court if we lose.'

The case began when Ronald Prena and Richard Clark were arrested on Nov. 8. 1974 for moving a 10-foot long plank that had been serving as a barrier to traffic. They were charged under a University ordinance that forbids tampering with MSU

"We're not trying to persecute these two guys," Hoffman said. "It's just that the implications of the outcome of this case are so important to MSU."

Hoffman said the prosecution's supplemental brief would be completed by Nov. 2, the deadline set by Judge Daniel Tschirhart. The Nov. 2 deadline was granted after Tschirhart decided that the original briefs did not answer the questions raised by Zolton Ferency, professor of criminal justice and attorney for the two defendants.

Hoffman said the outcome of the case would probably depend on the interpretation of Article 8, section 5 of Michigan's 1963 Constitution. The clause in question

"Each board shall have general supervision of its institution and the control and direction of all expenditures from the institutions' funds.' Hoffman said the purpose of that clause was intended by the convention delegates to give universities more power than granted in the 1909 constitution and to keep the legislature from interfering with educa-Ferency's argument is that the 1909 constitution allowed the legislature to pass laws giving ordinance-making power to univerisities. However, he adds that the 1963 constitution removes that power, invalidating laws which had previously allowed the universities to make and enforce ordinances. Article 11, section 8 of the 1909 Constitution reads:

Withdrawal drug not yet authorized here

By CAROLE LEIGH HUTTON

State News Staff Writer new use for an old drug is easing at some of the pain of heroin addiction hdrawal in some 20 rehabilitation centhroughout the country, but governnt red tape is holding up its use in the nsing area. The drug, darvon - n, is a variation of a nmonly prescribed pain - killer.

What darvon - n does is occupy a large percentage of the enzymes that float freely in the stomach during withdrawal because they have no heroin to break down.

These enzymes, when unoccupied, cause the typical withdrawal symptoms of nausea, cramps and vomiting.

Use of darvon - n has been so beneficial reduce considerably, or even eliminate, the patient's methadone dosage.

However, the federal government requires that any drug used for treatment in a federally subsidized clinic must be issued an Investigative New Drug number (IND) as a method of authorization.

No Lansing agency has obtained an IND and cannot use the drug. Several publically that in some cases doctors have been able to and privately funded clinics throughout the country have received their INDs.

Officials receive legal objections or proprosed charter amendment

By ELLEN SPONSELLER about whether "rent control is within the State News Staff Writer scope of the police powers conferred upon last Lansing city officials have received home rule cities" A home rule city is a city etter from Chester Lewis, asst. state empowered to make its own laws such as the legal 100-word limit. The attorney general's office also recommended that Gov. Milliken withhold his approval of the proposed amendment.

However, because the proposal was put on the ballot by an initiatory petition from citizens, neither the attorney general nor the governor has any power to change it. Under the State Home Rule Cities Act, a petition initiated by citizens must go on the ballot as written, regardless of legality.

If the city council had initated the proposal, the attorney general's office would have had the power to make sure everything in it was constitutional.

'This way, everybody's hands are tied," Lewis said. "We could only review the bill for mistakes in procedure and advise the governor on the efficiency of the petition."

The city council voted Sept. 2 to add a sentence to the ballot question concerning the rent control board's salary, but since no changes can be made in a petition-initiated proposal-under the Home Rule Act-the wording was eliminated.

The governor's office sent a note to the city concurring with the attorney general's Astead, tuition at George Washington Wersity medical school has jumped 0, or 56 per cent, to $5,000 annually in Past year and could more than double in by 1976-77 to $12,500 a year.

Lawyers for the medical school argue that the statement in the catalog was "merely a statement on intention" rather than a binding legal obligation. The students' lawyers say the catalog's use of the word "estimate" "signifies more than a mere guess or conjecture.'

At any rate, the school later changed that part of the catalog dealing with future tuition. The catalog now says administrators are "unable to predict what tuition will be in future years.'

From the school's point of view, the case bears on whether tuition may be again increased. When the school's trustees last January approved the $1,800 tuition hike for 1975-76, school officials issued a statement saying a hike to $12,500 would be necessary next year because of inflation, faculty salaries and the possible loss of federal funds.

WASHINGTON (AP) - Sen. William Proxmire, D - Wis., said Monday there is "an alarming lack of control" over the use, storage and dispensing of drugs in Veterans Administration (VA) hospitals.

He said that, despite a General Accounting Office (GAO) report in 1972 warning against traditional ward stock medication systems, these are still being used by 164 of the 171 VA hospitals.

He also said that another GAO report last month indicated as many as 1.1 million tablets and capsules of potentially dangerous drugs could not be accounted for at the 11 VA hospitals studied.

New York budget cuts

NEW YORK (AP) - Gov. Hugh L. Carey and the state board which has taken control of New York City's finances met Monday to give final approval to a drastic new budget slash expected to cost thousands of city employes their jobs.

The purpose of the new cuts, ordered by the state legislature to be adopted by midnight Monday, is not only to save money but to demonstrate New York's willingness to make sacrifices to achieve

Trying to make this case, Mayor Abraham D. Beame told Congress that the city has already eliminated 31,000 jobs since Jan. 1, bringing its work force down to 263,311. State Controller Arthur Levitt said it was up to Beame, not the board, to determine the exact number of jobs to be eliminated. "The Control Board's duty is to see that the city arrives at a balance that eliminates the city's deficit in a three-year period," he

"A great deal more needs to be done and Beame must submit more details," Levitt said.

Beame also told a House economic stabilization subcommittee hearing in Washington that default by New York, which he said was inevitable without some form of federal help, would leave hundreds of millions of dollars worth of bills unpaid across the

Prof aids assassination inquiry

By EDWARD L. RONDERS State News Staff Writer

Ralph F. Turner, MSU professor of criminal justice, believes the precedent-setting format utilized in a study he recently helped complete might be used to re-investigate the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

Turner was one of seven civilian criminologists selected this summer by the Los Angeles County Superior court to re-examine the physical evidnece surrounding the murder of Senator Robert F. Kennedy by Sirhan Sirhan in 1968.

'As far as I can ascertain," Turner declared,"this is the first time a process such as this was used to clarify a criminal aspect of a case. I would hope that a similar procedure could be used to re-examine John Kennedy's murder."

According to State News legal sources, the format Turneralluded to did establish a legal precedent.

Turner pointed out the need for such an investigation, saying, "The problem with the Warren Commission report on President Kennedy is that it was done by government officials on another government official. The American public today has a tendency to doubt what our government is telling us. This is partly an aftermath of Watergate.

"A study, such as the one we concluded about Robert Kennedy," he continued, "not only might shed some new light on the case, but it might help restore some of the government's credibility with the American people.

Turner's criticism of the Warren Commission that investigated JFK's death was Lancour explained that funding for the first 16 topics out of a proposed 76 came from the sale of Michigan medallion me-

Though the commission is still selling the medals, the money is going for other projects - so the "Michigan Big Story" series must look elsewhere for funds.

The first 16 stories cost a total of $14,000 and were distributed in the form of a double record album to media centers of the state's school districts and in the form of newspaper columns to state newspapers.

The commission may now look for a federal grant to continue the series that has received good public response for its coverage of such topics as the seige of Detroit, Fort Mackinaw, and the formation of the United Auto Workers. "Some overtures have been made to the private sector for funding but with little success," said Lancour, who also said the commission might consider selling the albums to the public.

But until more funds are found to resume the series, the big record companies can breath a little easier - at least for awhile.

The right to vote no

One sure maxim of politics is that it is always easier to find a candidate to vote against than a candidate to vote for.

But when candidates for the major parties make the election look like Grendel versus Grendel's mother, and the third parties make pea - brains look like heavyweights, what's a voter to

One suggestion, recently introduced in the Kentucky legislature, is to permit a voter to vote "No."

According to this idea, there would be an extra lever on voting machines marked "None of the above." Votes for "None" wouldn't affect the outcome any - but wouldn't it be fun?

The candidates with the most votes would still be elected, but their swelled heads would be kept down to reasonable proportions by the knowledge that 20 - or 30, or 50 - per cent of the public would have preferred someone (anyone)

Can you imagine Nixon ranting incessantly about his "mandate" if most of the population, equally grossed out by McGovern, had voted "None of the above"?

Besides offering a solution to political arrogance, such a system would surely revive the American electorate and get the folks to the polls. Who could resist the chance to tell all of the politicians what we think of them with one vote?

After all, the right to vote should also guarantee the right not to vote and make it, too, count. The right to say yuk.

Biased report on Tull

I have some opinions on the Oct. 11 headline story on police activity at the Tull concert. The story was overblown. In a university milieu, rock concert events deserve reportage on the entertainment page, rather than headline coverage.

There was an absence of such examples as turnstile restrictions on booze and bottles at Tiger Stadium and Cobo Arena; admission practices which serve the best interest of all spectators.

There was no acknowledgement that rock concerts tend to attract outsiders and some segments of the student body who willfully defy resaonable regulations. Even schoolchildren know that the wretched excess of a few often inconvenience the majority.

The story emphasized the issues of Constitutionality and the opinions of professional civil libertarians. (Like the classic Frenchman and sex, leftist ideologists like Ferency can find Constitutional issues in ANYTHING.) I believe that the real issue is reasonableness of police discretion in applying preventive measures, which is a judgemental rather than a legal question in this context.

In summary, I feel that there was too much editorializing (opinion powdering), and too little reportage (information development and analvysis) in the story.

On the positive side, many thanks for publishing Buckley's column on your Opinion Page.

Newspaper dilemma in Washington D.C.

In Washington much of the talk is about an entirely local crisis. Namely, the definition of the responsibilities of Newspaper A to Newspaper B when Newspaper B has been the object of foul play. We are talking about the Washington Post. Its pressmen struck. and left the plant looking as if John Wayne and the Green Berets had had a go at it. What the pressmen did was sabotage, pure and simple, and it is a disturbing sense of the running immunity of labor union extremists that prompts one to guess that when the grand settlement is made, these felons will not go to jail, where they belong.

There is of course the temptation to comment on the Post's running affair with the trade unions. The Post is a reformist paper which every day draws for its readers the Hieronymus Bosch world of big business and corrupt Republicans. It has never shown a Woodward and Bernstein appetite for reform in the world of labor relations. Indeed, it is heavily linked to the Democratic Party, which when last heard from on the general subject was trying to repeal the right of individual states to outlaw the closed shop; providentially, one of President Lyndon Johnson's failures.

Then, too, there is the schizophrenic emotional problem of the Washington Post when it is denouncing monopolies. Like so many businessmen who ardently want competition for other businessmen, the Post desires competition for other businesses, having bought up the competition in the morning newspaper field in Washington 20 years ago.

Enter, now, the question of the Washington Star. That is the surviving afternoon paper in Washington. And it has been losing money faster even than its spunky publisher, Joe Allbritton, can make it in Texas banking and real estate. The Post comes along and asks Allbritton would he please permit his own plant to be used, during the idle hours of enterprise, and it will not be long before the day, for the purpose of publishing the Washington Post.

The following are the considerations that, one assumes, weighed on Allbritton in giving his answer:

1) If I print the Post, surely the pressmen in my own plant, showing that same dumb sense of solidarity that causes even the Walter Cronkites of this world to refuse to cross a picket line, will close down the Washington Star. If this were to happen, not only would Washington be left without a newspaper, the Star would almost certainly contract a terminal illness.

If you are losing a million dollars a month while publishing, you don't cease automatically to lose a million dollars a month by not publishing. There are too many running financial commitments which are not so neatly severed. What happens is that you lose more; and the cost of cranking up again to resume publishing is the kind of thing that kills newspapers as permanently as New York's Herald Tribune was killed.

2) If I fail to print the Post, I will get an economic transfusion of sorts for a little while. Only for a little while - because the enterprise, and it will not be long before edition of some sort is out on the stree provided the Newspaper Guild doesn't d the entire operation down. It cannot fail look as though we'll be profiteering from distress of the Post, but that profit exiguous, and in any event entirely con dental to the principal reason for continu to publish.

So Allbritton declined the Post's off and it is being said in Washington that Post's owner, Mrs. Graham, waxes ve wroth on this account. Indeed, a broadcas on her television station told a visitor t she was "determined" to "run" Allbrit out of Washington. James Reston, in column on the subject, says about as mu in lawn - tennis language.

It is a depressing dilemma. If our bi experiment with orderly self - government ends in my lifetime. I know that my fi question will be: why, why, didn't newspapers of the country unite to fi excessive power in the hands of the fe whose immunity rests solely on the super tion that they are the representatives of working man?

Rent control and HRP

This letter is to clarify any misconceptions which might result from Ellen Sponseller's Rent Control article in the Oct. 12 State News.

Elizabeth Nall and the Human Rights Party (HRP) did circulate the petitions which placed rent control on the ballot Nov. 4th. We brought rent control to the attention of the voters as an immediate means of addressing the critical housing situation in East

However, the HRP does not, in any way, consider rent control to be a radical or socialist solution to the housing crisis. In fact, it is quite within the liberal tradition for citizens to act and pacify a "free market" gone berserk. In this sense, rent control is not in keeping with HRP's or Elizabeth Nall's socialist philosophy. Yet something has to be done now for the elderly tenants in East Lansing who are literally being forced into poverty; for students who are being ripped - off with high rents for substandard housing, and for the home - owners who find the quality of life deteriorating in their neighborhoods while their property taxes increase.

We realized in the winter of '75 that rent control was little more than first aid for a terminally hemophilic "free market." It was then that Zolton Ferency encouraged us to take up the issue of a City Housing Authority as a long range socialist solution to East Lansing's housing emergency. This City Housing Authority would raise funds for public housing by issuing bonds which would be paid off by those who use the housing. The City Housing Authority would build new housing, purchase existing housing and operate both. It would encourage the development of housing co operatives to which it could turn over the housing. This is truly a socialist solution - not a cold bureaucratic socialism, but a humanistic socialism which involves people working to solve their own problems.

If George Griffiths and Larry Owen seek to join us in working for the realization of this vision by supporting the formation of a City Housing Authority, we welcome them with open arms. However, if they have taken up the issue of a City Housing Authority only for the sake of political expediency - to detract from the issue of rent control - or if they seek a Housing Authority which will serve only to channel the wealth of the people into the pockets of profiteers, they shall surely suffer the wrath of the people at the polls on Nov. 4th.

Kissinger, fine print and the Sinai record

Secretary of State Henry Kissinger is, as usual, giving out more advice than information. The Congress is to ratify promptly the Sinai agreements and the country is to unite behind them — even though it doesn't know what has been agreed to and probably never will until it's too late.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee, psyched up by its own rhetoric about equal partnership in foreign policy, staged a small tantrum of public disclosure last week. It defied the secretary and published four classified documents relating to the fruits of shuttle diplomacy. The fact that they had already been printed in the newspapers did not detract from the headlines of the event.

Nor did it diminish the remorse which inevitably overtook the members when they realized what they had done. Monday morning, Republican whip Robert P. Griffin of Michigan chided his brothers for falling into the new sin on Capitol Hill -"unilateral declassification," first committed by the Pike Committee of the House, which published four forbidden words.

The stricken senators could not unprint the documents, but it did the next best thing to make amends to the offended shuttle-god. They virtuously voted not to include them in their report to the Senate.

And at the earliest possible moment, they apologized to the secretary. Sen. Jacob Javits, R-N.Y., said he hoped that Kissinger had understood the committee's position in releasing the already-released material. The secretary graciously said he under-

Senator Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., went even further along the road of repentance. He was so distressed, he intoned in his hollow baritone, that he thought that when the Senate expressed its approval of the Sinai agreements it should display disapproval of itself for breaking its own rules.

This move to have the Senate slap its wrist, struck even the secretary as excessive and he diplomatically declined com-

The Administration has spared the Congress any heavy work in connection with Middle East peace. All the members have to do is vote to send 200 American volunteer technicians to watch over the early-warning system of the Israel-Egyptian borders. Once that is done, Israel and Egypt sign the papers, and the other parts of the "executive agreement," six of which are "legally binding" and have treaty force, go into effect. The Senate knows what they are, the public does not.

The dispatch of the 200 technicians set off this country's early-warning system and constituent mail has been running heavily against the agreement. Many Americans remembered how civilian volunteers in Vietnam grew to a bogged-down army of 525,000 in the rice paddies.

Kissinger dismisses the Vietnam analogy. The number is limited to 200, he assured Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, and limited by Congress.

He dislikes even more any parallels to Mayaguez, which Javits unhelpfully mentioned as an illustration of America's protectiveness towards its nationals in peril abroad. That incident, which resulted in heavy casualties which exceeded the number of those rescued, is something the secretary would rather forget as he prods the Senate towards passage of the Sinai agreements.

Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, a new unschooled in reverence, reminded secretary that when he announced accords, he had said the public could kn all about our commitments.

"There was never any idea to ke anything from the committee," Kissing replied vaguely.

"I am talking about the America people," said Clark, who cannot grasp whan enormous concession the secretary h made in telling senators his secrets.

He had considered, the secretary plained, releasing a summary of classified material but had decided again it on the grounds that it "sooner or would contribute more confusion."

He has always thought that disclosure his private foreign policy arrangeme would "contribute confusion." Some of the indeed have.

After it has ratified the agreement, Senate will doubtless go back to rai against "executive secrecy." It was a swell quote. Humphrey taking out of this country." If we don't tried it. It was the first conservative national administration in two decades. His approach was simple, a national budget was like a family budget, he thought, it had to be balanced, no matter what. Here in this room Joe Livingston asked Humphrey if he wouldn't cut taxes to meet a recession?

"No, I don't think so, Joe," the Secretary told us. "I don't think you can spend yourself rich."

Somebody asked, "Mr. Secretary, would you resign if the Administration embarked upon the deficit program you have just described?"

George Magoffin Humphrey paused and replied slowly, "I think I would."

The result? The Eisenhower Administration tried to reduce the national debt and failed; to halt inflation, and failed; to cut Federal spending, and failed; to check centralization, and failed. All this, and stagnation, too; why?

There is a little stir at the door. The lean, athletic secretary steps briskly in with an attractive smile. He wears a button-down shirt, an expensive suit and the four corners of his handkerchief are exposed at the breast pocket, all to exactly the same height as though measured. He is 47 and looks

They have been keeping him on the go, ever since Mr. Ford came out with that spectacular $28 billion tax package Oct. 6 in matching reduction in spending. Mr. Ford is now giving it everything he has, with a Truman-style attack on the "can't do Congress" for pooh-poohing it and he evidently intends to win conservatives away from Ronald Reagan on the same issue. And Simon -? After the original Ford press conference he appeared to explain the fine points; he spent five hours testifying before Congress; he briefed Republican congressmen. And now here he is again, in the traditional Treasury conference room, answering subtly hostile questions

Are they hostile? Well, I think so, for a variety of reasons. Partly it is the adversary relationship between reporters and big shots, and partly, probably, because a lot of us don't really believe in the new program. And partly it's the different personality; the Humphrey-Simon views are remarkably alike; but the give-and-take with George Humphrey was jollier; he was an outspoken industrialist, used to dealing with tough steel men, joshing with them or shouting them down. Simon with his clean-cut, high forehead and evangelical manner is the intellectual; more than that the dedicated idealogue with a touch of conscious rectitude, of self-righteousness.

which the cut in taxes would be offset by a classic choice between freedom and socialism," and made even Republicans titter when he said there was no politics in > Now he is telling us: big government, big spending, they must be stopped; this is the most important political choice of my lifetime!" The malignancy of big government, he says, spreads into many fields; New York City has been profligate and he implies that it must be punished. Cotton Mather, too, believed the world was divided between elect and damned and the minority could escape only by public recantation and maybe not then. The TV lights sparkle off his horn-rimmed glasses like approaching headlights; he raises his hands behind the pulpit; the spread of government is "so insidious it's hard to regognize it," he says, but when the American people catch on, look out!

He is brown-haired, good looking, clean cut, inspiring; he looks like the professor of moral philosophy at a Calvinist divinity school, the professor the girls swoon over, the one who puts an agreeable whiff of brimstone into warnings. Beneath the aggressive style there is a faintly discernible note, a hurt-little-boy tone of the kid who can't get the dumb clucks to understand. It is that stupid American public. Last week he told Congress, "We are facing He complains that "the level of economic literacy is unfortunatley lamentably low," but he is certain they will swing to repentance in the end.

Questions open traps for him all around the conference room, inviting him to fall in. It is orchestrated journalistic teamplay; an unsporting Washington game that pits the speaker against the field-in this case a speaker of passionate belief and uncertain tact, who told 20 million food stamp recipients that the program is "a well known haven for chislers and rip-off artists," and who told New York City that its default wouldn't hurt the economy much

Is this 18-year old Simon-Humphrey dogma correct? Federal spending is certainly way up, but it is almost unchanged as a ratio to expanding federal product (19.4 percent in the 1950's; 19.2 per cent now.) Yes, the huge deficit is dangerous, but most of it is due to recession-job insurance and loss of incomes. Cure the recession and you cure the deficit, too. The national debt? Horrendous in billions! But as a ratio of national production it is now far below 1950. Reporters are out in the corridor, now, comparing notes. The Simon bit about presidential vetoes is good we agree, but not very new; nothing to ask the stenographer, "Read that back to us-that's a good quote!" Nothing to curl your hair.

It's housecleaning time for the MSU

Now that the "other" big game of the year over and done with and the confrontation th the NCAA is now but a matter of tient waiting for the good or bad word, the sanctum for the jocks can seriously go out the business of selecting a new athletic

MSU would not only be doing its part for sing unemployment but would also do self a big favor by hiring someone who has ot come up the ranks. Remember, promong those of the home team to administrave posts is how we got where we are today. I'm sure Scott would fit in well here. His filiation with revolutionaries and his ce and ability in dealing with them ould certainly have come in handy when ebasketball team walked out on coach Gus

Again, his affiliation with those who were sought by the FBI would come in handy when recruiting football players. Methods more ingenious that automobile loans, credit cards and travel arrangements for friends and relatives could be arranged to entice players to the banks of the Red Cedar. Does the NCAA have a rule against giving magic potions to potential gridiron candidates? Perhaps they could even be kidnapped.

Better yet, I like the thought that we could brainwash our athletes into thinking that they could win.

Of course, with Scott as athletic director, the emphasis would no longer be on athletes. He feels the emphasis should be on the word "student" in the phrase "student athlete."

And that would be nice. Maybe then we would be a school with an attitude about sports like that other academic - minded Big Ten school (no, Not U - M, I'm talking about Northwestern.)

There it was, nearly half - way through the football season and Northwestern was tied for the lead in the Big Ten (until they ran into Bo's boys and, well — we all know what happened).

Meanwhile, we who are wont to have great expectations every fall are once again wondering why we bought season tickets in the first place. We'll be lucky if we make it to the Toilet Bowl in Septic, New Jersey.

And maybe, then, we wouldn't have our administrators flying off to Denver to chat with the biggies. And maybe, then, we'd have basketball teams that don't leave before they graduate. And maybe, then, we'd have flankers that understand their patterns and quarterbacks that can intelligently call plays and linemen who can comprehend the blocking.

But that would be asking for a lot, don't you think? It would never happen. MSU would never hire someone as outspoken and insightful as Scott.

They're looking for someone more like.

George Carlin proves he is master of irony

By JERONE MCGUIRE

George Carlin, intrepid master of the whimsically ironic word took on Lansing's collective sense of humor at Long's Banquet Center Sunday night.

Through two shows, Carlin triumphed with a methodical execution of his patented material yet avoided a frontal attack on the audience which stretched back in seemingly endless rows under the chandeliered ceiling.

Dressed in jeans and a "Van Morrison Europe '74 Tour" t shirt and armed with a microphone, Carlin coaxed guffaws from the audience that had been fortified from the bars that were set up around the brightly carpeted floor. Long's was dressed in opulence for the kind of irreverance, but the patrons eagerly offered up a few grunted calls for Carlin to parry.

The audience could easily have been an international brake shoe salesman's convention. Many in attendance were dressed to the hilt in doubleknits and accompanied by wives in made - up splendor that contrasted sharply with Carlin's jeans and t - shirt.

"I'm used to playing college auditoriums," Carlin said following the final show. "I'm not used to drinks before and after the shows. I had to conquer them (the Lansing audience)."

Carlin apologized for his lack of new and outrageous material during the second show. The show was professional and polished but perhaps predictable, the sarcasm lacked its full bit although the tired Carlin drove on through the performance like a trouper.

The show began with Travis Shook and the Club Wow, a comedic pair that use a Martin guitar and a beat up old Fender Precision bass as music makers and props for their routines.

Routines they were. They parodied the rock and roll Woodstock - agonized - peace - love dope routine with startling accuracy. It was funny but it was funnier when a serious band originally did it.

The bass player was quite good and the guitarist played well although he seemed restricted to a simple form of chord expression: bar chords. With all the booze there that would have been funny - bar chords (sic). Maybe they really wanted to be Rock and Roll wrinkled on stage than in the dressing room interview afterwards. George Carlin, the ultimate hip greaser, exposed the ironic idiocies in our lives and language, As expected, his delivery was well paced and his sound effects and mannerisms superbly practiced.

Carlin came out nervously fidgeting. His face was more

But the performance had a distant and anti - climactic feeling. He repeated his "shit piss cocksucker . . . routine" towards the end of his very long performance and concentrated on religious themes slightly bitter ironies from life as a young Catholic, the root of Carlinism. Carlinism could be defined as a need to show people how ridiculous the things that mean so much to them are, or things that meant so much to them or scared the devil out of them or made them feel embarassed - all ridicu-

"Throwing up changes your whole sense of values man . . . God is a cool guy man . . . What if Jesus was named Bloom instead of Christ. We'd all be bloomers man. Onward bloomer soldiers. It'd be cool man," Carlin mused.

After the performance a few journalists were led into the dressing room for a short interview following a long wait while a tuxedo'd Longian said that the State of Michigan had liquor laws and people should leave.

Carlin was tired but fielded the questions politely and seriously, even the "how's it like on the road, Mr Carlin" questions. He was serious. His skin looked much less pale than it did onstage behind the black face of his watch. Serious. He was puzzled over a question about Michigan being the bean growing capital of the nation which was meant to expose the irony of a career built on exposing ironies.

Where is this guy coming from." his face seemed to say. "He's not playing his role."

Well the reviewer just wanted to see how George Carlin reacted to his own style, turned upon him, if people tried to make him laugh, impress him with their command of the Carlinesque. Oh well he has to do it, it's his job. One marijuana joke. There was a policeman in the front row and Carlin said "cocksucker" and got away with it. Of course it does have double meaning.

Or maybe it doesn't anything or at least not m That was Long's on Sw night, nicely appointed, holed (lot of bottles on table) but nothing earth

Local writer's private eye series debuts with 'Crockett on the Loose'

By MARTY SOMMERNESS State News Reviewer

Crockett is on the loose in East Lansing. Crockett is on the loose in Michigan. Crockett is on the loose across the country. "Crockett on the Loose" is the pilot in a series of detective novels authored by area writer Brad Lang.

Fred Crockett, the protagonist of the series, is a young private detective who works alone in a Michigan college town much like East Lansing.

A blue - jeaned, work shirted, long - haired loner, Crockett works with that part of humanity who function like some malignant growth. Crockett is at home with the junkies, freaks, pushers and small - time losers who would rather squirm underneath the gritty bark of society than be exposed to the sunlight and inquiring breeze of public scru-

Almost in tribute to the decadence the young private investigator deals with daily. Crockett's office in a less - than fashionable neighborhood is decorated with the nadir in sleaziness - a poster of Mick Jagger and the Rolling Stones.

"Crockett on the Loose" is the story of one man against the system. Crockett, hired by a rich Bloomfield Hills man to find his missing college student daughter, follows his case from the university campus to the seamy world of the drug - culture. While trying to find the girl, Crockett runs smack - dab into a group of police roughnecks: a crooked narcotics squad. To solve the dilemma, Crockett has to fight the cops. Officially, they try to arrest him for possession of heroin they planted in his flat. Unofficially, they try to kill him for uncovering their drug ring.

In the best Dashiell Hammett/ Raymond Chandler tradition, Crockett extracts himself from the situation.

"The plot is not meant to be a screwy thing readers have to solve," said Lang. "The idea of the story is that in 1975 there are different kinds of barbarity that aren't exactly the same as 1945," he ture fiction. added.

city and university in his book were not East Lansing and MSU.

"Every campus has a circle said. drive," he said.

Yet, besides the one - wav circle drive, the fictionalized university seems much like

Student government, Crockett explained "was about as much of a government as the March of Dimes. About ten percent of the university students voted in any given election. A motley crew of weirdos, freaks, communists and general political crazies usually managed to get themselves elected, although lately they had been getting a lot of pressure from a coalition of the fraternities and right wing types.

"Now they just sit in their offices and played games, having about as much effect on campus life as the Venezuelan Dept. of Sanitation," Crockett concluded.

Lang, 28, has mixed feelings about being a published writer. "Crockett on the Loose" was printed by Leisure Books, a publisher of paperback adven-

"It's fun, but on the other Lang said that the un - named hand, I don't want to be known as a quickie - detective novelist. I have a desire to produce something worthwhile," Lang

"I'm trying to learn my craft.

I've tried to keep as far away from Mickey Spillane as I can. I try to keep away from the 'gosh gollies'," Lang said.

Crockett on the Loose," of which 50,000 copies have been printed, is the first of the Crockett series. It is scheduled to be followed in January by "Perdition Express," Lang said.

"Each of the books has a theme. The first one was obviously drugs. The second is involved with rock bands, the third with gay lib," he said.

Whatever the topic, Lang has disproved for Lansing area readers the old trite phrase "Be it ever so humble, there's no police like Holmes."

MSU freshman wails away with bagpipe

By ALAN G. BURLINGHAM State News Staff Writer

If you hear repeated sounds like a cat screaming at full force on your way to class this fall, don't worry. The British army is not marching on campus. It's probably just Ellen Mole practicing on her bagpipes for an important competition or entertaining the passersby near the Music Building.

One of Mole's biggest problems since coming to MSU has been finding a suitable place to practice. Bagpipes are loud and have no volume control. This naturally poses difficulties in a drawing large crowds.

"I'm glad people are interested in what I'm doing," she said, "because it certainly

University of Guelph next year.

The pipes are regarded as a difficult instrument to play and the best pipers usually start young. Mole, who began playing the pipes about four years ago, admits that she should have started earlier but added that she could not stand the pipes when she was little. Both of her parents, who are of Scottish ancestry, also play the Volunteers aid foreign student

By CASSANDRA SPRATLING

State News Staff Writer Foreign students at MSU can learn English a lot easier if they have everyday experience practicing it. Apparently the Volunteer Bureau and the English Language Center agree because together they sponsor a program that allows foreign students at MSU to meet with other MSU students to converse in English.

The program, formerly called English for Foreign Students and now called International Interactions, has been in operations for about three years.

Although the program has been successful, coordinator Mary Edens and student coordinator Chris Stone said they usually have one major problem, not enough student volun

"This term we have 100 foreign students who want tutors but only 50 volunteers." Stone said. "I think the problem is that people just don't know this program exists and if they sign up their schedule is very flexible."

Edens said there is a special need for more married student volunteers because up to a Stone said there are no qualifications to be a volunteer in this program "except friendliness towards others and an interest in learning about other cultures."

The only language American students have to know how to speak is English," Edens added. In addition to allowing foreign students a chance to practice English, International Interactions allows the foreign student to learn various things about the American culture. Although most of the communication between the students and the volunteers is on a one to one basis, the Volunteer Bureau sometimes sponsors special events for all of the foreign students and their volunteers such as a dinner at Yat Wah being planned for sometime next month.

Paul Munsell, director of the English Language Center, said their students are not required to have a volunteer but it helps.

"The Volunteer Bureau provides our students with a very necessary opportunity to have everyday practical experience practicing the language," he said. "Most of our students would like this kind of help."

Edens said students interested in the program should register in room 26 Student Services Bldg. They are then directed to room 12 of the International Center where they look through the files of students who have applied for a volunteer.

The files contain such things
