Carter meets delegate goal

By The Associated Press

VOLUME 70

Jimmy Carter picked up his 1,505th Democratic National Convention delegate Thursday, enough to mathmatically clinch the presidential nomination, but President Ford and Ronald Reagan continued thier for GOP delegates, taking their search to Minnesota. Carter, who was virtually assured of the nomination two weeks ago, moved to an outright majority of delegates, according to the continuing Associated Press poll which includes delegates pledged to Carter or who say they will vote for him at the convention. The Harris poll released on Thursday showed Carter has moved ahead of President Ford by 53-40 per cent and could beat Reagan by 58-35 per cent. The poll of 1,480 registered voters showed Carter has picked up the backing of traditional Democratic party groups.

Thursday the AP tally of the Republican race showed Ford with 1,008 delegates pledged to him or who have said they will support him in the national convention leaving the President 122 short of the nomination. Reagan had 928. Ford supporters hold about a 55 per cent edge in the Minnesota convention and are shooting for a sweep of all 18 delegates. Reagan backers say they deserve at least six delegate slots because of Reagan's strength in Minnesota. Reagan will speak to the convention at 11:15 a.m. today and First Lady Betty Ford will address the meeting at 12:15 p.m. In Connecticut, campaign strategists for Ronald Reagan announced a drive to win some of Connecticut's 35 delegates to the GOP National Convention. Sixty-three delegates stand to be chosen tions including Minnesota, where Ford got his 55 per cent control of the state same thing Reagan's people are saying in his 55 per cent control of the state convention by winning the GOP primary. Twenty delegates are to be chosen in Montana, 21 in New Mexico and four in

Detroit, Pontiac Stadium will receive tax dollars

By JOANNA FIRESTONE

LANSING (UPI)-Gov. Milliken has signed into law legislation giving the financially-ailing city of Detroit $27.8 million in state tax dollars - plus a controversial $800,000 grant to the Pontiac Stadium.

The measure was part of a package worked out between Milliken and Detroit Mayor Coleman A. Young. Other parts of the deal included a three-mill garbage tax for the city and cutbacks in local services Though he was expected to attend the bill signing, Young did not show up. Milliken's surprised aides said they had no idea why he did not attend. "It is not a 'bail-out' for the city," Milliken said of the measure. "It is part of a self help package which has included some excruciatingly painful decisions and deep cuts in the city budget as well as an additional tax which was approved by the legislature last month, signed by me and levied by Common Council.'

Milliken said the city and state "must now work for long term solutions — among them the tax-base sharing concept." "The suburbs and the state as a whole have begun to share the social problems that were once concentrated - and therefore more visible - in our major cities," he said.

"It is time to start sharing the solutions." Milliken has proposed that wealthier and growing suburbs share their tax money with decaying cities such as Detroit. The measure thus far, however, has received the cold shoulder from suburban law-

The proposal signed Thursday includes: $9.5 million for the Detroit Public Library, Institute of Arts and historical museums: $600,000 for the public health laboratory; $529,000 for the Detroit Health Dept.; $9.2 million for the pension liability of the Detroit Dept. of Transportation; and $8 million to help cut the operating deficit of the Detroit General Hospital.

Milliken said the grants were warranted because the facilities actually benefit residents of many communities, although the city has traditionally paid for them by itself. The aid package traveled a tough road in the legislature, where lawmakers were split as to whether the annual $800,000 grant for the stadium should be included.

Critics said the state should not be subsidizing private ventures. As signed into law, the proposal called for a full $800,000 subsidy this year with a pledge to phase out the annual appro-priation if the economic health of the stadium warrants it.

Students at Michigan colleges and universities may soon be eligible for state-financed loans originally intended to be made available when a public act was signed into law in August of 1975.

SB 1409, which became law this week, clarifies the power of the Michigan Direct Student Loan Authority and defines the type of bonds that can be issued. The new also reduces the chance of legal challenge to the loan program and should make potential investors more confident.

Michigan college students presently have access to a wide variety of financial aid programs from which approximately onethird of all Michigan college students receive some assistance. In addition to scholarships and tuition grants which students are not required to repay, some students are eligible to receive loans. Many of these loans are secured from private lenders such as banks and credit unions who are able to collect from the state in case of default. However, because college costs have nearly doubled in the past decade and because of serious fluctuations in the money market, funds available through private lenders are often limited to students who meet specific conditions, such as seniors or students whose families have long standing accounts with the banks.

Because of the contention that more money could be made available for student loans if the state were to become a direct lender through the issuance of revenue bonds, the Michigan Higher Education Loan Authority Act was enacted in 1975

However, a provision coupled with the act required that the legislature request a Supreme Court advisory opinion to determine the legality of the state issuance of the bonds. Due to a conflict with scheduling, the appointed that they were expected to contribute each year to the political funds. Frank Nizio, operator of a large branch office in Dearborn, said that if a branch manager failed to contribute "then you would be out. It's as simple as that." There are 95 fee branch offices in the state run by managers appointed by Austin as independent contractors. The managers pay for their office space and employe wages. The state pays managers 40 cents for each vehicle license plate and 25 cents for registering a boat.

Branch manager contracts must be renewed each July 1. This year renewals come only a little more than a month before the Aug. 3 primary in which Austin is seeking the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate.

opinion was not passed until after the effective date of the act and the Court declined to rule. Recently, Atty.Gen. Frank Kelley ruled that the constitutionality of the act had been substantially proved by existing case law, therefore, the section requesting a Supreme Court opinion could be removed from the act and the bill returned to the legislature to be voted on again in its present form.

Though it has been estimated that default on student loans has nearly doubled in the past year, the bill easily passed through the House and Senate before being signed into law by Gov. Milliken.

Technically the student loan authority had the power to sell the bonds on the open market since October of 1975, but people were discouraged from purchasing the bonds due to the Supreme Court's refusal to (continued on page 7)

Employes go back to work

BOSTON (AP) — State employes went back to work Thursday, ending the first statewide strike in Massachusetts history after three days on the picket lines. Meanwhile, state representatives and union leaders returned to the bargaining table.

Prisons, the state Dept. of Public Works and the Massachusetts District Commission reported workers were back on the job in compliance with back-to-work orders from the union leadership.

"In consideration of the progress that has taken place, we are today ordering all workers back to work immediately," said Howard V. Doyle, chairman of the Alliance, a union coalition representing most state employes.

Doyle's order came after an all-night session with a court-appointed mediator - just 15 minutes before the 6 a.m. return-to-work deadline set by a Superior Court judge.

California grass fire halted

PLYMOUTH, Calif. (AP) — A grass fire that had burned nearly 50 square miles, the largest in drought-stricken California this year, was halted Thursday outside the Gold Rush town in the Sierra foothills.

While 1.500 fire fighters nervously watched their shrinking lines, they were vulnerable almost everywhere to renewal of Wednesday's scorching 50-mile-per-hour winds.

An oval of rain-starved ranchland measuring 10 by five miles at some points was blackened in less than eight hours. Smoke was visible in Sacramento, 30 miles west.

Fourteen buildings, including four or five houses and a tree bark processing plant near the outbreak of the fire, were destroyed.

Two fire fighters were treated for smoke inhalation. No other injuries were reported.

"I am confident Plymouth is in no danger," said California Division of Forestry spokesman Larry Krogen. "But everything depends on the weather.

Portugal elections in doubt

LISBON (AP) —Interior Minister Vasco Almeida e Costa became Portugal's acting premier Thursday as the nation waited to see if Sunday's presidential elections would be postponed

The 44-year-old navy commander was named by President Francisco da Costa Gomes after Premier Jose Pinheiro de Azevedo, one of four candidates seeking the presidency, suffered a serious heart attack Wednesday while campaigning in Oporto.

A medical bulletin from the hospital in Oporto this morning said the 59 year old admiral recovered consciousness but that his condition was still grave. His doctors refused to speculate about his chances of recovery.

Under a recent law, the first presidential electionsa since the overthrow of the fascist dictatorship two years ago would be postponed automatically if Azevedo died without withdrawing before the polls opened.

Although Azevedo ran third in the latest opinion polls, mony political experts believed that his illness assured victory on the first ballot for the front runner, the army chief of staff. Gen. Antonio Ramalho Eanes.

Ford requests judicial limits

WASHINGTON (AP) President Ford asked Congress

Thursday to restrict the power of federal judges to impose school busing and to put a five-year limit on any orders that are issued. Atty. Gen. Edward H. Levi said the proposed legislation will not affect those school districts that already have court-mandated busing, except that the five-year limitation would go into effect for them when the bill becomes law. "The clock this requires wouldn't start running until the effective date of this act." Levi told a news conference after Ford signed the proposed legislation.

But the attorney general said that does not mean such school districts would be prevented from going into court earlier and citing the intent of Congress to put curbs on busing. The President, in a message that accompanied the proposed legislation, restated his belief that "in their earnest desire to carry out the decisions of the Supreme Court, some judges of lower federal courts have gone

The President said, "I believe that busing as a remedy ought to be the last resort . . . the goal of the judicial remedy in a school desegregation case ought to be to put the school system and its students where they would have been if the acts which violate the Constitution had never occurred." The legislation would require a court that has a desegregation case to determine how much racial concentration in a school or school system would have existed if unlawful segregation had not occurred.

Federal judges could only impose busing and other deseg regation remedies to eliminate the degree of student racial concentration caused by deliberate discrimination. The legislation also would create an independent national com-munity and education committee to help any school community that asks assistance in voluntarily resolving a segregation problem. White House said that the bill is the result of an eight-month review of school desegregation. Levi said that about 600 school districts can

CAIRO (AP) - Syria and Egypt have decided to end their 10-month-old quarrel and coordinate policies on Israel, the Middle East news agency reported Thursday.

The agency said it was an-nounced at the end of a prime ministers' meeting in Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, that the two countries would restore diplomatic relations, broken three weeks ago.

The two countries have been feuding since last fall, when Egypt signed an agreement to separate its forces and Israeli troops on the Sinai Peninsula. Syria condemned the agreement. Egypt severed relations after the Egyptian Embassy in Damascus was ransacked.

The news agency said Syria and Egypt had decided to form a political-military committee, headed by their foreign ministers, to coordinate policy and "lay a common basis for political action serving the cause of liberation and a just peace in the Middle East."

The meeting was also attended by the prime ministers of Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, who have been trying to mediate the Damascus-Cairo dispute for months.

All four participants called for a cease-fire in the Lebanese civil war and the use of a Pan-Arab peacekeeping force to separate the combatants.

Guerillas mount counterattack

BEIRUT (AP) — Palestinian guerillas mounted a two-front counterattack Thursday against Christian forces trying to overrun two strategic refugee camps on the hills of southeastern Beirut

The three-day battle for the camps of Tal Zaatar and Jisr al-Basha also touched off fierce artillery exchanges between Moslem and Christian gunmen all along the line dividing Beirut and the nearby mountains into religious camps.

More than 150 persons — combatants and civilians caught in the shelling — were killed and 200 wounded in the last 24 hour period, according to estimates from hospitals and security officials

One subject known to be under discussion is the possibility of resettling white Rhodesians in Western Europe and South Africa if political control passes to Rhodesia's 6.1 million blacks.

as 8,000 parking permits above that number, creating a hunting situation. During the meeting, MSU President Clifton Wharton asked Ballard to have the

All-University Traffic Committee look into the problem. The committee, which is manned by three faculty and staff mem-bers, two graduate students, four undergraduate students with a Dept. of Public Safety representative and the University Traffic Engineer as ex-officio members deals with the parking problem quite frequently, according to some members. James Bath, professor of Natural Science and a member of the committee, said that "a big part of what we do concerns parking." A meeting doesn't pass without parking coming up," Bath said. "There's always more people wanting more parking." Though he is quick to note that MSU is one of the more liberal campuses concerning parking regulations and the price of passes, Bath does have some suggestions for remedying the situation.

"We've got to look at peripheral campus parking and transportation along the line of buses," he said. "We should use the outlying area more instead of trying to cram more people on campus." Bath recognizes the problem cited by Trustee Stack concerning adjunct faculty parking. "There are too many cars," he said, and most of them don't need to be here. They come in the morning and sit until five o'clock.

Another member of the All-University Traffic Committee offered the possibility of eliminating some of the special parking permits issued by the University. Most of those go to students needing to drive on campus and to adjunct faculty. Richard Bernitt, director of the Dept. of Public Safety, said that he does not feel the parking problem on campus is as major as some think it is.

"There is no lack of parking spaces on this campus," Bernitt said. "There is a lack of space at the door of each building, which is what people want."

Bernitt said that he did see a problem of congestion in some areas of campus, specifically East Circle Drive, but noted that "no one is ever satisfied unless they can park at the door."

Both Bath and Bernitt agree that the construction of a new parking ramp would cause more traffic congestion on campus and therefore was not considered a feasible solution.

PBB issue is a public matter

Ever since PBB, a toxic sub- pertaining to the health threat of court. stance, was accidentally mixed among some state livestock feed and subsequently introduced into food items which are being sold on the market, the public has manifested an amazing degree of ambivalence toward its possible deleterious effects.

So far, the PBB debacle has succeeded in causing much misery to farmers and only recently has aroused the attention of the governor and the legislature.

But the public itself seems undisturbed, even uninformed, about the entire matter.

A panel of scientists selected by Gov. Milliken to investigate the effects of PBB recently recommended that the food safety levels be reduced to the lowest measurable amount — one part of PBB per billion for milk and five parts per billion for meat. The panel recommended the move after drawing ominous conclusions about the possible longe-range side-effects of PBB which could possibly contribute to the formation of birth defects and cancer.

Contrary to the panel's recommendations, the five-member State Agricultural Commission, earlier this week, unanimously decided against lowering the tolerance level of PBB in food and refused to remove PBBcontaminated meat and milk products from grocery shelves across posed by PBB and the severe economic loss it would inflict on farmers if such action were to be taken.

Certainly any governmental restraint on the liberty of farmers to sell their produce would result in sharp economic losses for them. Many of the farmers who have already suffered from the effects of PBB have received no aid or reparation from the state government.

Yet, the question continues to plague us. What grave consequences does PBB-tainted food hold for the public-at-large?

Definite answers have not been found to this question and scientists are far from arriving at an answer which will sufficiently allav the fears and doubts of both farmers and those of the public who are concerned.

Despite the increasing anguish it may cause farmers, it is from a cautious and responsible standpoint that we urge members of the legislature, the only other body invested with proper authority in the area, to impose more stringest guidelines on PBB levels and to begin removing PBBcontaminated food from grocery stores.

Any losses to farmers that will, thereby, occur from this legislation should then be alleviated by the state or settled with the state the state. The board based its Farm Bureau, where the feed decision on the lack of proof mix-up occurred, inside or outside

The hardships suffered by farmers because of the PBB adversity are unavoidably our responsibility, but to an even greater degree it is of the utmost importance that we prevent the possibility, remote as it may be, of any harmful long-range effects of PBB.

For legislators, their commitment to the entire public should be uppermost in their minds. Already many legislators have voiced their approval over new legislation introducing more rigorous PBB curbs.

The rest is up to those concerned citizens whose responsibility it is to impress upon their fellow citizens the significance of this problem.

After the commission had released its report, state Agricul-tural Director B. Dale Ball stated that, "If there is no benefit, why spend money and put farmers out of business?" Such a statement is far from the real issue.

What is at stake here is more than the livelihoods of numerous farmers throughout the state. Rather it is the health and safety of the public, as ignorant as it may be of the situation.

Thus we appeal to the legislature to ignore the stand taken by the commission and to begin taking deliberate steps toward the destruction of all PBB-contaminated foods. We also ask that they take the necessary measures toward restoring the economic well-being of farmers who will suffer from such a move.

As an alumnus of Michigan State and a former reporter for the State News, I was shocked to learn that no students had come out in support of Mike Marshall, who was denied access to a university facility for what on the surface at least appears to be arbitrary reasons.

The only surprising thing about the whole affair to me was that someone had the guts to act when his rights as a student were abridged. Like Mike, I find it difficult to mourn for a link in a chain that was cut so that what was intended to serve as a practice area for athletics could fulfill that function.

Looking back, it seems to me that Michigan State often failed to make its facilities open to its students. For me the symbol of this failure was the university library, where 15 minutes before closing time (11 p.m.) the lights would go off and the staff would start shuffling chairs. Five minutes before closing a buzzer would go off. This cattle-call treatment obviously did not make for too many free-thinkers, as witness the reaction to the Marshall incident.

A university, particularly an enormous university like Michigan State, should be a resource center not only for the students and faculty, but for the outside community. The library should be open all night, if necessary, and should close at the venience of its patrons, not so the staff can punch out on time. The athletic facility should be open free to the community (as it is at Wayne State) at least on certain days. A university, of all social organisms, should be open to changes in policy, to develop new forms of making more complete human beings. What else is it for? Charles Flowers

Industrial interests at heart of problem

By LORNA MUHA

Industries believe (and would like us to believe) that litter is exclusively a "people problem" and spend enormous sums of money trying to convince us of that without ever minimizing their own litter. They argue it will only raise prices and create hardships for aluminum and steel manufacturers and retailers.

Legislators and consumers contend that litter is also an industrial problem and support government intervention by in-"bottle bills." They believe it will troducing lessen litter, save precious energy and decrease the cost of disposing solid waste.

Oregon's bottle bill (effective 1972) was the first to enforce minimum deposits on beverage containers. The bill provides for mandatory deposits on soft drink and beer bottles; it bans all cans with pull-tab openers and provides incentives for the recycling of standardized returnable bottles.

Pre-bottle bill surveys taken by the Oregon State Highway Department indicated that one way bottle and can litter made up 62% of highway litter "by The volume measurement takes volume." into account the visual impact of beverage containers and are unlike the "piece" counts generally cited by Keep America Beautiful, Inc. (Piece counts give the same weight to a cigarette butt as it does to a throwaway can.)

The principal objective of Oregon's bottle bill was to reduce litter and it did. Based on surveys by the Oregon Highway Department and Oregon State University, the bill caused:

•a 90% drop in the number of beverage containers littered per mile between co responding months before and after the bill;

assured a return rate for the returnables of at least 90%; . through the reuse of bottles and virtual elimination of cans, a savings in energy alone, of about 1,300 billion BTU's per year (enough heat for the homes of 290 of Oregon's population.) • an 88% drop in solid waste from beverage containers. • an increase in employment with an overall gain of 365 jobs, and • an additional payroll of $1.6 million. Price increases, where they occurred were found not caused by the bill, but by inflation. (For example. Oregon's prices rose 7.8% in 1978. Washington's prices rose 11% with no bottle bill.)

A similar proposal in Michigan, is again underway to prohibit throwaway beverage containers. The bill prohibits the use of non-returnable beverage containers for beer and soft drinks, and also prohibits the use of pull tabs on metal cans. At least a ten cent deposit is required on all such containers, except those which can be re-used by more than one beverage packer. These would require at least a five cent deposit. What is the situation in Michigan? In litter . . . the Michigan Department of State Highway and Transportation esti-mates it costs between $600,000 and $700,000 yearly to pick up "avoidable litter." These figures don't include the cost of litter pick up on city, county, and township roads, or in local, state and national parks, nor the money and time donated by volunteers to pick up litter. In cost ... Mr. J. Lucien Smith, President of Coca-Cola, USA stated before a U.S. Senate

Senate committee, "Non-returnable packages are priced higher than returnable bottles." If you can find them!

In employment . . . Dr. Myron Ross, A Western Michigan University economist prepared a study in 1974, which concluded a Michigan bottle bill would "most likely" cause a net employment increase of 9,165 jobs (with a very conservative estimate of 5,602 jobs.)

Why so much opposition? Because good ideas always threaten vested interests, in this case the interests lie in business and unions, who exert the most pressure.

William F. May, chairman of the American Can Company, concedes that litter in Oregon has improved, but at a cost of about $10 million per year in increased costs of beer and pop (this conflicts with the study done at Oregon State University). He says business loses are greater, in that "half of the cans in the country are manufactured for beverages and there is little or no prospect of making them re-usable." Yet an incident reported that a volunteer group had collected tons of cans for recycling, handed the cans over to a steel company, only to have them thrown out and never reused. Mr. May contends that returnable bottles are reused about 10 times on the average in Oregon, but the bottles must be sturdier and cost twice as much to make. The EPA retorts that the production of such containers, if re-used 10 times, requires far less energy than is needed for no deposit cans and bottles. The use of returnables means less pollution of air and water in the manufacturing process, lower consumption of virgin materials and less municipal solid waste.

One of the major oppositions is Keep America Beautiful, Inc. Run by industrialists, who since 1953, have been trying to persuade the public with alogans like "Containers don't litter — people do" and "Pitch-in," that litter is exclusively a "people problem" so it would not be thought Ecology of as an industrial one. With ear resources, including $40 million wh donated advertising time and space conated advertising time and spire marshalling of 10 million boy al scouts, KAB has failed to minimum litter its own board members mandle The chairman of the board of dired KAB is the chairman and chief excets the American Car Company the the American Can Company, now than the William F. have been catastrophic for nuclear power,"

According to Tuchinsky, however, voter support of nuclear energy was not the reason for the California initiative's defeat. "Gigantic business interests," said Tuchinsky, spent three times more in opposition to the referendum than did the referendum's supporters. He also says that the voters did not want to affect existing nuclear plants, which is what the California initiative would have done.

And before the referendum, the public will swing to its side.

Reactor Operator Steve Ewald (left) and Pat Miller take a radiation reading of a sample that has been irradiated in the engineering building reactor, which is known as TRIGA. The sample has been irradiated by radiation produced in the core of the reactor, which is through the reeel and plexiglass grate Ewald and Miller are standing on. Even the TRIGA reactor, a baby as far as nuclear reactors go, must be covered by 20 feet of water to cool it. Used mostly for research, the reactor was built in 1969 by Bruce Wilkinson, associate professor of chemical engineering.

California legislature passed legislation which achieved some — but not all — of the "We have time on our side," Tuchinsky said. "Public sensitivity to the dangers of aims of the initiative, thus dampening nuclear power is growing by leaps and bounds. Tuchinsky said PIRGIM would not push

"There have been national surveys on public sentiment toward nuclear energy, and the public comes out 2 to 1 in favor," he said.

PIRGIM will continue to push for nuclear energy safety legislation at the state level in addition to its initiative campaign.

Tuchinsky said, "What we will urge before the legislature will be the same as we advocate on the petition. But we are not going to be rigid about it. If somebody comes up with a better way to accomplish what we want to accomplish, then we will support it. But if it is to be substantially weakened, obviously we are going to oppose it." Wilkinson says he too will be active in the nuclear energy fight.

"I would speak my piece whenever I get the opportunity," he said. "I don't know how violent or outspoken I'll be, and I don't know if I'll go out 'stumping,' though.

Wilkinson, who says, "if I had to live next to a power plant I'd prefer it to be a nuclear unit. believes nuclear reactors are the country's only assurance of sufficient power in the future.

reserves left to continue burning them to produce electricty," said Wilkinson. "To do so would keep us at the mercy of foreign governments. If we curtail any significant energy source we run the risk of reducing our own safety and security." Tuchinsky, however, says it is more of a risk to develop nuclear power than to remain dependent on foreign energy sources.

Energy independence, said Tuchinsky, "Sounds like a good idea, especially after the Arab oil embargo. But not the cost of exposing ourselves to extremely high levels of danger of nucelar power." He added that the breeder reactors which are presently being developed are more dangerous than the more conventional uranium-fired reactors.

"There is less known about these reactors than about uranium fired reactors, Tuchinsky said.

"One of the problems with the whole nuclear field," said Wilkinson, "is everything's hypothetical."

Wilkinson said the best analysis he's seen concludes that the most catastrophic nuclear accident would result in dozens of deaths and not thousands.

Wilkinson added that the chance of being hurt by a nuclear accident is about the same as being hurt by a falling meteorite.

"But we don't stay in buildings to protect don't have enough domestic ourselves from that," he said.

Nuclear reactor utilized for scientific research

Most everybody knows about the MSU Cyclotron, an "atom smasher" which accelerates nuclear particles around a circular space about five feet in diameter at one-third the speed of light to see how they behave

But the cyclotron doesn't engage in nuclear fission, which is the center of so much of the controversy over nuclear energy.

But there is a little-known machine buried beneath 20 feet of water in the Engineering Building which does indeed engage in fission and is by all definitions a nuclear reactor.

MSU's reactor, which was built by Bruce Wilkinson, associate professor of chemical engineering, is what he calls "a pussy cat." It is small in the family of reactors.

The Engineering Building reactor is too small to produce electricity economically, consequently most of the heat it produces is thrown away, rather than being used to heat steam and produce electricity.

But the little reactor must be licensed by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, as must be the people who operate it.

It is used primarily for research, said Wilkinson of the machine which is inspected three times annually. The reactor manufactures radio isotopes for "anybody who wants to use them.

This is utilized by various fields of science, including geologists, who are able to determine the elemental content of materials by radioactivating them.

Reactors of the MSU-type are also used for crime-control purposes. By radioactivating evidence found at scenes of crime, said Wilkinson, police are able to get evidence on suspected criminals.

Fitzpatrick said a final report will be prepared when the job questionnaires sent to spring graduates are returned.

The Endicott Report con cluded that liberal arts graduates will have a rough time finding jobs, and that many companies feel graduates are studying the wrong fields. The report said only 11 percent of the companies surveyed plan to hire liberal arts graduates, while 87 percent plan to hire graduates with degrees in specialized fields. Fitzpatrick said graduates from the College of Business fared best on the job market "I am mainly concerned with agriculture and business graduates," he said, "but business graduates did esspecially well, with accounting the most conspicuous."

The report also concluded that salaries for graduates rose about 5 per cent over last year, but this amount does not keep up with the rise in the cost of living. The outlook looks best for women and minority student graduates with specialized degrees, with 97 per cent of the firms surveyed planning to hire more of these candidates in the

The companies were also questioned on whether they thought too many students were attending college, and though a majority disagreed, 74 per cent said that many students are in the wrong fields. Some comments were, "Too many students do not major in the disciplines which are in demand," and "There will not be enough jobs for teaching and liberal arts graduates." Frank Endicott, retired director of placement at Northwestern University, and author of the report, said a liberal arts education is valuable, and he does not view college education as being just a preparation for the job market.

He said college should broaden the horizons of students to help them understand political and social forces, and that it is not possible to overeducate a student.

A group of hamsters ming in the basement of the Women's IM Building are not preparing to enter any races. These hamsters have muscular dystrophy and are the subjects of a proonged study by Rex Carrow, professor of anatomy, and William W. Heusner and Wayne D. Van Huss, professors of health, physical education and recreation

The three MSU professors, conducting the study under the auspices of the National Institute of Health, hope the study may provide some useful guidelines for supervised exercise for humans suffering from muscular dystrophy.

"Right now the cause of the disease is unknown," Heusner said. "We are hoping to modify it in some way." Carrow said only a few been pubstudies have been pub-lished regarding the effects of exercise in the case of muscular dystro"About one half of these idea reports support the idea that exercise is beneficial, while those remaining contend that exercise programs are detrimental." he said

The MSU study began with a preliminary pro-gram of daily one-hour swims for the hamsters over an eight-week period. In contrast to a study done in the East where middleaged hamsters were set swimming for two to four with disastrous hours results, the professors decided to use younger, 25-day-old hamsters divided into three groups: normal, sedentary dystrophic and swimming dystrophic.

After allowing the hamsters 10 days to adjust to the laboratory, the professors then set one group of dystrophic hamsters to swimming daily for an hour.

Measure requires dates on food items

LANSING (UPI) - The Senate has approved legislation designed to let shoppers know whether several grocery items are fresh.

The measure, returned to the House Thursday on a 23-11 vote, requires grocers to stamp certain products with a date indicating the last day of maximum freshness.

It does not mean, however, that food products must be removed from grocery shelves after that date.

Covered under the legislation are prepackaged meat, fish, seafood, poultry, eggs, bakery products and some other perishable foods. Exempted are fresh fruit, vegetables, canned food, frozen food, milk and milk products.

"It only really takes care of half the spectrum," said Sen. John C. Hertel, D-Harper Woods, who nevertheless defended the measure against an admitted attempt to render it less effective.

Amendments offered Wednesday by Sen. Richard J. Allen, R-Alma, would have required dating only for prod-

Bill could repeal new business tax

LANSING (UPI)-Legislation has been introduced in the state Senate to repeal Michigan's controversial new Single Business Tax (SBT).

The tax, which replaced seven business taxes with a single levy on payroll and profits, has come under fire from small businessmen who claim it discriminates against them and has in some cases doubled their tax bills.

The move to repeal the SBT was offered by Senate Republican Leader Robert W. Davis of Gaylord. Davis said the old tax system would be revived under the bill

"At a time when our state is struggling out of a major financial crisis, the Single Business Tax has caused discord and confusion, rather than generating stability," Davis said. "And there are disturbing indications that flaws in the law will cause revenues to fall short of projections, at the same time some businesses are being seriously penalized.

"The intent of the bill-to stimulate jobs and smooth out our rollercoaster tax revenues -is sound. It's essential that not want to "reopen wounds" we continue to pursue those goals. But it's obvious that the case Single Business Tax cannot have this desirable impact without very major revisions."

The new tax was aimed at creating new jobs by allowing a tax write off for capital invest-ties in it. The governor has appointed a special task force of businessmen to investigate the single tax's impact on various kinds of ucts that might become unfit for consumption through aging. Nertel objected that the bill had nothing to do with health hazards. Its purpose, he said, is "to make certain that products are fresh and that they still contain essential nutrients.

"I will fully admit that this amendment strikes at the heart of the bill," Allen said, adding that he believes the legislation would add "a tremendous mid-dleman burden to the cost to the consumer.

"If Ivory soap fails to float." Allen said, "you will quit buying it. But don't ask the government to step in and determine whether it should float one-half or two-thirds above the water line."

He was supported by Sen Thomas Guastello, D-Sterling Heights, who said the bill amounts to "sending a policeman to the grocery store with the housewife "I think both Senators, because of the arguments they offered, should wash their mouths out with soap," Hertel responded.

He and other proponents of the legislation, arguing that many shoppers are unable to look around for better stores, managed to defeat Allen's amendment on a 17-15 vote.

Mike Marshall traded again

By Edward L. Ronders State News Sports Writer

e little, two little, three little, four little Indians. ⁹ "four cigar store Indians" who patrol the infield for Los les may have been the catalysts which sent Dodger relief ace Marshall off to Atlanta Wednesday.

shall, who is a doctoral candidate at MSU, had created some elings among his Dodger teammates during his three-year in Los Angeles. And, his vocal opinion regarding the ve prowess of his teammates may be the reason behind his nd trade in four years.

ormer MSU standout and current Dodger first baseman Steve ey said Thursday, "I think Mike was trying to create usiasm among the infielders when he pitched. But, he told us when he looked around the infield all he saw were four little store Indians. That really didn't set too well with the guys." hat's like telling your wife she isn't a good cook," Garvey inued. "It's a possibility that some of the players went to see Campanis (Dodger president) to complain. But I couldn't rm that." mpanis denied Thursday that any players approached him complaints regarding the former Cy Young award winner's ade. "That quote about the Indians didn't set well with some of our players, but I believe we have some awfully big men on this club who can overcome things like that," Campanis explained.

Meanwhile, Garvey added that the same Dodgers had a difficult time accepting Marshall's late arrival for spring training because of his studies at MSU. "I don't think people understand Mike Marshall. Personally, I believe it's great that he's putting education ahead of baseball. But, some players don't understand this. And, I can see their point. Even though Mike stays in excellent shape in the off season, there's certain things which need work in spring training," Garvey said.

"Things like cutoff plays, pickoffs and covering first base need to be worked on to get the timing down. Some guys didn't accept that Marshall was allowed to miss that part of training," he added. Garvey had an idea the trade was coming. "When you get booed in your home park, you know there's deep problems. Don't get me wrong, the Dodger fans are the greatest, but they were booing Wrong, the Dodger tans are the greatest, but they were booing Mike, so you could tell something was wrong," he stated. Another topic of dispute among the Dodgers, according to Garvey, was a meeting held at the end of last season. "On the last flight home, a meeting was held and among other things it was decided to change hotels in three cities. The only problem was that not everybody on the team was at that meeting," Garvey noted. Marshall, who was player representative for the Los Angeles team, then took the results of that meeting to Dodger officials and the team changed hotels in the three cities. "It wasn't like it was reported earlier," Garvey noted. "We didn't change from the Waldorf to the Sheraton in New York because of women soliciting in the lobby. It was a combination of things. Among them was the fact that the coffee shop closed in one hotel before we could possibly return after a night game. But, that problem has been worked out. And, in fact, on our next trip to New York we're staying at the Waldorf.

Meanwhile, Atlanta general manager John Alevicos disregarded Marshall's history as a troublemaker. "There's a million clubhouse lawyers. As for Marshall blaming his infielders about lack of support, I feel that's blown way out of proportion. I can remember once when Brooks Robinson dropped three pop-ups in one game and then blamed the groundskeeper. That's impossible," he said.

"It goes back to Marshall being a perfectionist. When someone is like that it's hard for them to accept things. And, unfortunately, since Mike is a highly intellectual human being and a professional athlete, he doesn't really have time to explain his beliefs to people," Alevicos commented.

As for Marshall's pitching ability, Alevicos said, "He'll get all the work he wants here. We have four solid starters but we've been lacking in the bullpen. The Dodgers wanted some left handed hitters and we needed a reliefer. I think both clubs are satisfied."

Marshall was en route Thursday from Houston to Atlanta, where he was to report to the Braves, and was unavailable for Marshall appeared in 106 games for the Dodgers two years when they won the pennant. So far this year he has appeared in 30 games and has a 4-3 win-loss record and eight saves. But, in his last 11 2-3 innings, the right-hander has surrendered 27 earned-runs while his earned run average soared to 4.45. Marshall had been overshadowed in the Los Angeles bullpen recently by knuckleballing Charlie Hough. "One of the reasons we were able to put Marshall on waivers was the emergence of Hough as a relief pitcher." Campanis said.

In exchange for Marshall, the Dodgers received infielder Lee Lacy and relief pitcher Elias Sosa from the Braves case.

Kuhn seeking revenge? A's Finley believes so

Bv MILTON RICHMAN UPI Sports Editor

NEW YORK (UPI)-As baseball commissioner, Bowie hn is supposed to be above petty animosities, but being eball commissioner certainly doesn't exempt him from ving personal feelings and the one he doesn't hide especially ill is his feeling for Charlie Finley. le doesn't like him.

That could be the understatement of the month. lowie Kuhn's feelings toward Charlie Finley run pretty p and that's not hard to understand at all. How would you about a man who did everything he possibly could to have removed from your job the way Charlie Finley did a year during baseball's summer meetings in Milwaukee. How ald you feel about a man who called you names like "the lage idiot" and "a 14-carat kook," names that held you up to c ridicule?

You wouldn't like it at all. Neither does Bowie Kuhn. You'd you could find some way of not having to deal with such a awmore, and Bowie Kuhn isn't fooling Charlie Finley for a more, and Bowie Kunn isn t fooling chaine a most cond. The Oakland A's' owner knows Kuhn would love to him out of baseball completely the same way he'd like to Kuhn out as commissioner. Finley feels Kuhn is doing rything he can to drive him out. one of those who witnessed the episode are ever likely to get the sudden rush of color to Kuhn's face Finley produced n he made an attempt at offering his comments to smen last July 16 in the very same meeting room of waukee's Pfister Hotel where the commissioner had just nounced his re-election for a second seven-year term. 'Not in MY room you don't," Kuhn cut Finley off sharply, ing him starting to talk with reporters on one side of the room.

n some ways, Bowie Kuhn feels Charlie Finley would be tical of anybody who was baseball commissioner and in er ways, he's equally sure Finley is never going to let up on What puzzles me most is how Bowie Kuhnm, with the law kground he has, ever allowed himself to get out on the legal thin ice he's on now. The two chief reasons he has given for canceling Finley's sales of Joe Rudi and Rollie Fingers to the Red Sox and Vida Blue to the Yankees for $3.5 million only lend more credence to Finley's charge Kuhn is making this a "personal vendetta" against him.

Kuhn said he disapproved the deals because he felt they were "inconsistent with the best interests" of baseball and because, in his judgment, they would upset the competitive balance in the American League.

These statements are open to some question.

I'm sure Bowie Kuhn would agree that the best interests of baseball are served best by its rules, which were expressly formulated with the best interest of the game in mind. That being the case, would he please be good enough to show me where it says anywhere in the rules that one club is prohibited from selling its players for ANY price.

There aren't any more races in the America League East and the National League East and half the season isn't even gone. After Kansas City and Texas, there isn't a whole lot of competitive balance in the American League West either. If he's so concerned about that balance, what does he have in mind for the end of this season when so many players will become agents? The Twins, Orioles and A's have so many in that category that none of them may win 50 games next year. What is Bowie Kuhn doing about THAT competitive balance? What can he do?

For one, he can reduce the player limit from 25 to 23. That would provide the weaker clubs with additional players and even up the competitive balance more.

For two, he can do something about making all waivers irrevocable. He can see to it players may be optioned out only once instead of three times; he can set up some drafting procedure whereby the weaker clubs could select certain players from the stronger ones.

You're welcome, Bowie.

Those are four simple changes that would help the competitive balance in both leagues.

As for competitive balance, he should look at the standings

Big Ten cagers set to premiere on Sunday afternoon TV in '77

Basketball fans across the nation may well see key Big Ten matchups on Sunday afternoons next season.

The National Broadcasting Company (NBC) announced Tuesday that it will televise a series of college basketball games on Sunday afternoons in 1977, the first time college sports will be seen on network television on Sunday.

Though no firm commitments have been made regarding Big Ten squads, plans are being formulated to televise the Michigan-Marquette clash from Ann Arbor next March 6 and one game between defending conference champion Indiana and Michigan.

According to Big Ten spokes-person, Charles D. Henry, Henry, 'Everything is still in the contingency stage right now, but league officials have discussed the televising of two or three Big Ten games on Sun-that the Wolverines' March 6 date with Marquette was set likes of Michigan and Indiana among the cage elite, "It would be a natural. Plus, in the seven-state area which the conference encompasses, there are more television sets than in any other comparable location

Originally the conference fathers had tentatively slated the first Indiana-Michigan contest for January 2, a Sunday, with an eye towards possible national television exposure. However, the Hoosiers are scheduled to compete in the Sugar Bowl tournament in New Orleans that weekend but that slate of games was changed when the Sugar Bowl was switched to January 1 from December 31.

"That would mean Indiana would play on the first and then have to travel after the game and play again the next day. I don't think they'll go for that,"

Henry said. Henry added that further plans would be discussed when the commissioners of 11 various collegiate conferences meet in Massachusetts later this month. "The Big Ten has scheduled a meeting for July 14 and I feel certain this matter will be discussed then," he said. In addition to the Michigan-Marquette, Michigan-Indiana tilts, there also remains a possibility that one of the two games between Indiana and Purdue will also be televised nationally.

Deadlines are fast approaching for entries into various

IM-sponsored events. Today is the final day for entries in the slow pitch softball league. There is a $12 entry fee for each team which may be made up of full or part-time students, faculty and staff. MSU botany major finds page job in House exciting

What's an MSU botany major doing carrying steaming cups of coffee in the legislative chamber of the state Capitol?

For Jerri Gillett, 21-year-old sophomore from Utica, it's "a great experience to work here and learn what politics is all about"

learn what politics is all about." Jerri, one of 14 pages - there are seven men and seven women - won the non-renewable oneyear appointment through the time-worn patronage system, rewarding service to help candidates get elected to office. For her, it was campaigning in behalf of Rep. Kirby Holmes [R-Utica], representing the 26th District.

"I was excited about working on the floor of the House when I first started," she says. "And even though there are boring days, it's still interesting. It's a good way," she adds, "to see how legislation is accomplished.

"I get really cynical when I see all the dumb things that go on, but then I feel really positive when I see that 110 people can agree enough on something to pass it as legislation."

Pages run errands in downtown Lansing, sometimes take a legislator to the airport or bus station – but, Jerri emphasizes, they've never made a pass at the pages. "After all, some of them are old enough to be my father."

Pages can't actively participate in any campaign duties while on the job, but are not restricted during off-duty hours.

Though most former pages look for jobs that will further involve them in politics, Jerri probably will bc returning to a botanyrelated employment opportunity when her year as a Capitol page expires on July 28.
