Overcharging of oil alleged

By STAN BENJAMIN Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON - The government Wednesday accused seven major oil companies of overcharging their customers nearly $1.7 billion during a five-and-ahalf-year period and said the money should

The Energy Department proposed orders to make the oil companies return the alleged crude oil overcharges, either to customers or to the federal treasury.

Paul Bloom, special Energy Department counsel for compliance, said no charges of criminal activity were involved.

If overcharges are confirmed, the Energy Department wants the money refunded directly to customers whose claims can be identified; overcharged money that cannot be refunded to specific customers may be refunded to the general public through rollbacks of prices by the companies, or as a last resort through payments to the federal Treasury.

The companies were accused of violating federal price controls on crude oil, mainly by incorrectly classifying oil into categories that would allow it to be sold at higher

Bloom said the total of nearly $1.7 billion in overcharges included about $500 million previously alleged as possible overcharges. He said the $500 million is now included in the new enforcement actions seeking refunds from the companies.

He said the proposed orders seek refunds totalling $888,328,889 from Texaco; $577,959,477 from Gulf Oil; $101,618,243 from Standard Oil of California; $42,023,718 from Atlantic Richfield; $29,063,516 from Marathon Oil; $24,139,927 from Standard Oil of Indiana; and $16,969,403 from Standard Oil of Ohio.

A Marathon Oil spokesperson commented that the overcharging allegation was "completely untrue." Spokesperson Bill Ryder said his company would "vigorously oppose" any refund order.

A spokesperson for Gulf, Dorothy Brown, said her company "categorically denies it has violated Department of Energy regulations concerning prices obtained for domestic crude oil and that as a result any purchaser was overcharged.

Texaco spokesperson Mike McDermott said Texaco "believes that it has acted proposed by government properly." He said the Energy Department of the proposed orders Wednesday morning in Washington.

Refunds of $1.7 billion allegations "represent a further attempt by the department to retroactively interpret and enforce ambiguous regulations."

Altantic Richfield spokesperson R.E. Parr, reading a prepared statement, said, "As the (Energy Department) rules and regulations zigged and zagged, we have tried - and, we think, succeeded - in abiding by them. Atlantic Richfield will vigorously defend its position."

Bloom said at a news conference that legal representatives of all seven companies were notified of the proposed orders by telephone Tuesday afternoon and had received copies

Bloom said some 67 enforcement actions had previously been taken, alleging a total of some $2.3 billion in overcharges for crude

Since about $500 million of the $1.7 billion in Wednesday's proposed orders were included in the earlier actions, the total of alleged overcharges now has climbed to about $3.5 billion, Bloom said.

The allegations have stemmed from audits of the major refiners to check their compliance with federal price regulations from August 1973 through March 1979.

Bloom said most of the alleged pricing violations involved incorrect designation of oil producing property in which oil that should have been classified as "old" oil was sold as new oil at a higher price.

He said other violations involved classification of some oil as having come from so-called "stripper wells" - low-production wells that are exempt from federal price

The Energy Department said some of the companies redrew boundaries of their oil fields in order to increase the amount of oil that could be classified as "new oil" - that produced from wells placed in operation after 1972.

Production added to an oil field after 1972 can be sold at the "new" oil price for $13 per barrel, while "old" oil is limited under price controls to $6 per barrel. Thus, on paper, a field that produced mainly "old" oil could appear to be "new" oil land, the department

N-plant opening delayed

DETROIT - The opening of the Fermi 2 nuclear power plant near Monroe could be delayed as much as a year because of a safety review prompted by the Three Mile Island accident, Detroit Edison Co. said Wednesday.

The utility said it has also temporarily suspended detailed design work on its Greenwood 2 and 3 plants near Port Huron, which are to contain reactors designed by Babcock & Wilcox, the firm that designed Three Mile Island.

Word of the move came in a presentation by William Meese, Edison chairperson, to the New York Society of Security Analysts.

accident, however, Edison officials ordered a review of safety systems at company nuclear plants under construction and in the planning stages.

The opening of the Fermi 2 plant, which is about 85 percent completed, now will be delayed into 1981, perhaps as much as into

"We know now because we've diverted much of our senior engineering talent to this study of our safety systems that there'll be a delay of at least a month," said Wayne Jens, Edison's manager of engineering and construction.

"It might be as long as a year. But because of the situation the way it is right now, it's uncertain," Jens said. Detailed design work on the Greenwood plants probably would not resume at least until year's end as Edison officials wait for the findings of the Three Mile Island

"We felt it prudent at this time that since there might be some changes as a result of Three Mile Island, particularly because we have a B&W (Babcock & Wilcox) plant, that we might want to delay," he said.

The reactor and cooling systems at the Greenwood plants, scheduled to begin operating in 1989 and 1991, were "basically Both actions are designed to allow the the same" as those at the Three Mile Island

However, the design delay probably would not require pushing back the scheduled opening dates for the facilities,

Licensing work on all three plants was continuing and construction of Fermi 2 would continue "as long as appropriate regulatory agencies agree that it should, said an Edison statement.

Alabama city's health plan switch provokes walkout by employees

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — About 1,000 street and sanitation workers joined a strike by nearly 500 policeofficers Wednesday to protest a change in health insurance plans. A judge ordered a halt to the walkout and the mayor threatened dismissals, but there was no immediate movement back to work.

The strike was called to protest a city council decision to switch employees' health insurance coverage from Blue Cross-Blue Shield to Liberty National Life Insurance Co. But Liberty National chairperson Frank Samford Jr. told the city Wednesday the firm doesn't want the contract because the company is "particularly distressed" the situation reached a strike stage "harmful" to the employees and the citizens of Birmingham.

"We have come to the conclusion that the administration of the city's health plan by this company under these circumstances would be extremely difficult." he said. After the insurance company backed out of the contract, Mayor David Vann said he believes city workers were "tuned" for a walkout and only seized on the issue of health

He said his administration would consider proposals from other insurance companies. And he apologized to Liberty National, saying it was "disappointing that city employees have inappropriately and wrongfully attacked and criticized this company.

Representatives of the striking workers could not immediately be reached for comment on the health insurance company's action.

Most services were shutdown in this city of 320,000, pickets were up at city offices, and the National Guard was lined up outside City Hall.

"They are here to provide emergency assistance," Offa Nichols, Vann's top assistant, said of the troops. "We would be foolish not to expect trouble. Vann, however, said, "There is no danger to the public's safety.

The city's 650 firefighters scheduled a strike vote for Thursday night, and union president Billy Gray said he expected his fighters to walk out then.

Jefferson County Circuit Judge William Thompson issued a temporary back-to-work order and set a hearing for Monday on whether to make it permanent.

The police department's personnel office estimated that at least 95 percent of 507 officers on the force failed to report for duty. Only skeleton crews of sergeants, lieutenants and captains were working at the four precincts.

British election today; close result expected

By ED BLANCHE Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - Britain's 41 million voters decide today whether the country will continue along a moderate socialist path under the Laborites of Prime Minister James Callaghan or take a sharp turn to the right under the Conservatives of Margaret

Late opinion polls indicated a fairly even split among the country's 41 million voters, raising the prospect of a "hung Parliament," with neither the Laborites nor the Conservatives winning an overall majority to govern the country for the next five years.

Four late polls in Thursday's morning newspapers predicted Thatcher will topple Callaghan.

Three polls backed a Conservative forecast of a 25-to 30-seat majority in the 635-member House of Commons, while the established Gallup Poll predicted the Tories will win only a slight margin, and probably not enough for an overall majority. Before the polls were published, both

"Eigenauer was finally pinned down by an old State News clip which quoted his mention of a dump site;" he said. "We confronted him with the evidence and he admitted the existance of a waste study done for the University by Ryckman, Edgerley, Tomlinson and Associates Inc. in March 1970."

The study concluded the area was not adequately fenced or protected, creating safety hazard to the general public and animals

The study stated the pit was left open, covered with only a metal screen and some corrugated metal sheeting, making it easy for children to gain access.

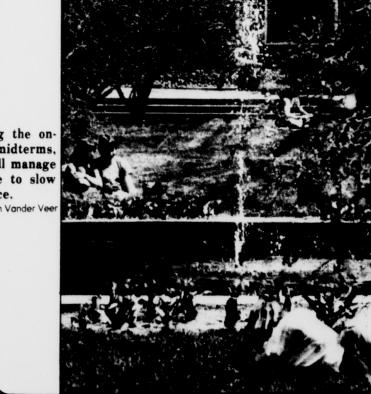

Keesler said the pit has not been used since July 1970. However, an unidentified source in the MSU grounds department said unlined pits have only been unused since 1973, when concrete septic tanks were put into the ground.

Tim Eder, founder of Environmental Information Services, said he believes the power plant waste site is still used for dumping. "There were a bunch of 55-gallon drums there a few weeks ago," he said. "Someone went out there two days ago and said the drums were gone and the area appeared to be freshly leveled off."

Keesler said the power plant disposal site is believed to have a clay bottom designed to prevent seepage. (continued on page 14)

West Bank mayors protest Jewish settlement

TAPUAH, Occupied West Bank (AP) -Thousands of Israelis celebrating independence day marched through the occupied West Bank on Wednesday and Prime Minister Menachem Begin reiterated that Jews have the right to settle in the disputed land.

The nationalist march sparked protests among West Bank Palestinians. An Arab youth was shot in a demonstration in Bir Zeit and 10 West Bank mayors marched peacefully through the city of Nablus to demand an end to Jewish settlements on the West Bank of the Jordan River.

The mayors also resolved to call a general strike May 15 against settlements, against the autonomy plan and against the Israel-Egypt peace treaty, which they said is a sellout of the Palestinian cause.

Begin, in a radio interview broadcast on Israel's 31st independence day, said his negotiators would demand the continuation of Israeli settlements when talks on West Bank autonomy start with Egypt late this month.

Oil decontrol foes sow unexpected strength

WASHINGTON (AP) - Foes of President Carter's decision to lift controls on oil prices showed unexpected strength Wednesday, coming within a single vote of winning a key committee battle to block the plan.

After the vote, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill declared he would not stand in the way of those seeking to torpedo Carter's oil decontrol plan although he expressed doubts the effort would succeed.

"I wouldn't attempt to thwart them. the speaker told reporters.

In the most serious attack to date on the plan, key Democrats on the House Commerce Committee, including its chairperson, Rep. Harley O. Staggers, D-W.Va., openly broke ranks with the president and joined a move against decontrol led by Rep. Toby Moffett.

Meanwhile, the Senate voted 89-3 to give Carter authority to order thermostats in public buildings set to no more than 65 degrees in winter or less than 80 degrees in the summer

Senators also went along with a recommendation of the Senate Energy Committee by rejecting, 70-23, a controversial proposal to give Carter the authority to ban outdoor electric adver-

In November 1978, I ordered three slips and one pair of men's undershorts from Bloomingdale's department store in New York. I charged all of the gifts to my Bloomingdale's charge account. When I received my order, I found that one of the slips had a hole in it so I sent it back Dec. 7. I received the men's undershorts (which were to be a Christmas gift) three weeks ago with another bill for $11. I've called and written letters, but I get no response. All I want now is for Bloomingdale's to cancel the bill for the undershorts and to send me back $20 for the slip plus the handling charges I paid.

The manager of Bloomingdale's lingerie department, Laurie Eigen, apologized for the

Milliken supports health program

By JAMES KATES State News Staff Writer

Employers, physicians and union officials should examine the benefits of providing health care through non-profit health maintenance organizations, Gov. William G. Milliken said Wednesday. Milliken spoke at the Lansing Civic Center before about 700 people at the co-sponsored with the Association of Michigan HMOs. A health maintenance organization, or HMO, which is an alternative to conventional health insurance, is a group of medical personnel which offers comprehensive medical care on a pre-paid basis. "HMOs can have a broader impact by providing a competitive force within the health care industry," Milliken said.

"HMOs offer the potential for realizing substantial savings while offering high quality, assessible care."

The governor said HMOs are particularly attractive because they have a fixed budget - derived from premiums paid by members - and therefore have strong incentives to cut costs.

They are also desirable because they emphasize preventive medicine and are governed by the persons receiving the care, he added.

Milliken said the state should have "significantly more" than its present 2 percent of the population which is enrolled

"HMOs are one option that has proven effective and economical, and we should support their development," he said.

Milliken said much of the savings with HMOs resulted from fewer hospitalizations, which are a large portion of health care costs.

"In 1977, all Michigan citizens used inpatient hospital services at the rate of 1,183 days per 1,000 persons," he said. "The median rate for Michigan HMOs was 596 days per 1,000 persons - about half the state rate. Other speakers, including business and labor leaders and HMO administrators, asked that the HMO model be considered as Governor's Conference on HMOs, which he an alternative to conventional "fee-forservice" health care. Walter McClure, a consultant with InterStudy, a Minneapolis group which advises HMOs, said rising health-care costs

"Anyone who acts cost-effectively under present insurance systems cuts his own throat." he said.

The "spare-no-expense" mentality leads many physicians to prescribe care particularly hospitalization - when it is not warranted, McClure said.

He said an HMO system would give doctors an incentive to prescribe only the care they believe necessary. "Doctors under pre-paid care would have to become more efficient to avoid going broke," he said. "We can't confuse quantity with quality," he added. "More medical care won't necessarily make us healthier.' McClure said he believed private HMOs would provide a better way to lower medical costs than government regulation. "I am concerned about a rush to regulation when other industries' experience with it is dismal," he said.

"Private competition may be the salvation - not the end - of private practice."

Lawrence Carrington, the national employee benefits director for the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. and the president of the National Association of Employers for Health Maintenance Organizations, said he expects more companies to begin offering HMO care to their employees as costs rise and HMOs become more (continued on page 11)

"We also take care of problems," she said, "those complaints about our services which

Hines said a rehabilitation counselor working with CAP helps a client get ready for and find a job. They help them with vocational goals and training, depending on the characteristics and abilities of the handicapper. "One point about the rehabilitation plan is that it's supposed to be individual," Hines said, "so there is much area for misjudgment and disappointment." Many areas exist for complaint, she said, but this is a community service and it follows through with the client. "First we talk to the person and get some background," she said, "then we talk to the

Handicapper ruling could let discrimination flourish

Within the past two years questions regarding race and sex were deemed inappropriate for college admission forms. Recently, Frank A. Schmidt, director of the Michigan Veterans Trust Fund, asked the attorney general's office whether questions regarding a person's disabilities were also inappropriate. Attorney General Frank Kelley said it was not inappropriate, nor was it a violation to Michigan Handicapper's Civil Rights Act.

The ruling by the attorney general has points that are perfectly reasonable, but it seems the ruling will also leave colleges ample room to abuse handicapper's rights and expectations.

According to the Michigan Handicapper's Civil Rights Act, "an educational institution shall not discriminate . . . because of a handicap that is unrelated to the individual's ability to utilize and benefit from the institution or its services, or because of the use by an individual of adaptive devices or aids.

That Michigan law forbids colleges and universities from turning away qualified handicapper students. But while it forbids discriminatory admission stand- issue. The discrimination that does provide special consideration for the handicapper student. In other words, a college can admit a student, take their money and then say, "If you can't make it around, that is your problem."

Thankfully, this has not been the case at MSU. This Univesity is recognized by other universities and handicapper students nationwide as a model institution for handicapper benefits, programs and general understanding. A Board of Trustees-mandated provision that says all future 'U' buildings must be accessible is a case in point. But despite MSU's glowing record, people close to the programs are well-aware of pervasive shortcomings. This is not so much an indication of MSU's lack of effort as much as it is mute testimony to the appalling conditions in the rest of the state and nation.

Under Attorney General Kelley's recent ruling, colleges are allowed to ask whether a student has a debilitating handicap. The question was put to the attorney general as a decision on a privacy issue more than a discrimination ards, it does not mandate a college and will occur will not be directly affected by the ruling.

> By and large, most handicapper students base a college selection on which institution can provide for their individual needs. Most students will know, or should know, if a college can meet their individual needs before the admissions process begins. With that in mind, the attorney general's ruling has little impact.

> The problems will come in because now a school can determine whether a student's handicaps will prevent "utilization" instead of letting the student decide. The ruling did not specify process a college may ask the question. If it is during the very first inquiry, there could be

It is quite possible that small private colleges could get applications from wheelchair users and decide the use of that "device" is directly related to the "individual's ability to utilize and benefit from the institution or its services." If a university made such a determination, it could consider itself within the law to refuse admission.

Of course, a person's ability to utilize an institution should never be dependent on physical capabilities, but on mental ones. However, the wording of the law does not make that determination clear. A college could easily make a physical determination and totally disregard mental qualifications either because facilities may not exist at the particular institution or administrators may be of the medieval opinion that handicappers are an embarassment to "normal" students. Either way, blatant discrimination may have been given an opportunity to

MSU students should be aware of the impact PIRGIM has had in a number of social issues that have transpired in the past year. The University showed its awareness when it allowed the research group to continue collecting taxes at registration from students, even though the organization has failed to meet the University's tax collection criteria for the past two years.

Under the criteria, PIRGIM was required to obtain at least 20 percent of its revenue from the students, who have the option of giving $1 per term to the group by checking PIRGIM's designated box on student fee cards. PIRGIM has failed to reach that figure for two years, yet MSU has opted, quite legitimately, to give PIRGIM a well-deserved benefit of the doubt. Allocation of MSU students' funds to an infinite number of groups is always a tricky and controversial affair. But PIRGIM's track record has shown it deserves the minimal fund accrued through student donations.

Those who had a raised social consciousness following the Midland nuclear protest have PIRGIM to thank. Their efforts and communication with other Michigan anti-nuke groups made what some critics might call a worthless demonstration a successful vent for pent-up frustrations. PIRGIM has consistently supported human interests, as well as serving the public through effective representation of consumer's rights. It is only fitting for the University to do everything it can to keep this statewide organization rolling, lest it be dealt a fatal blow by financial instability.

That problem has sent too many other worthwhile programs, privately or governmentally organized, to an early death. It is a rare occasion when any organized group effort produces the desired results and PIRGIM is one such rarity. By today's apathetic standards, PIRGIM stands out as a refreshing remedy for a community often devoid of warranted concern. That should say something about the state of affairs nowadays, as well as the thousands of students whose reactions to social concerns can now so easily be expressed by checking a box at registration. PIRGIM virtually does the work for students, and its demise would certainly mean a noticable reduction in consumer and public input. At a time when consumer gripes too often fall on deaf ears, we cannot afford weakness now.

PIRGIM has been granted a one-year extension to meet the University's criteria. That task should not be a hard one, since the group is already less than 1 percent away from compliance. Rising student concern, recently evidenced through massive participation in PIRGIM events, should point the way to increasing support for this worthwhile organization.

Hannah vs. Tricky Dick

It's too bad that Jeff Weill didn't have the opportunity while at MSU, to learn anything about President Emeritus John A. Hannah, his varied career in public life, and his many contributions to society at home and abroad. Our former President is a figure of national and international stature, and if you listen to him at Commencement, you will learn something. I have heard him speak on several occasions, and he is a challenging, interesting, informative speaker. Never has he been boring or wasteful of his

Where to put the money

On April 26. I encountered what I believe to be the continuing attitude of the University, administration, DPS, and others that students have little, if any rights on this campus. My car was parked in front of McDonel Hall at a meter spot, but no meter existed. As I was looking out the fourth floor elevator lobby I noticed a student police officer issuing a ticket to my car. I yelled from above asking Mr. Badge #734 how he could give me a ticket when there wasn't any meter. Mr. Badge #734 just smiled and laughed, and continued to write the ticket. I yelled again, asking him where should I have put the money if there wasn't any meter. And with this he replied quote, unquote, "Put it up your

Now I ask you, if I would have done so, would any time have registered on my face? Should I have stood out in the rain, beside my car with my finger in front of my nose, indicating that I still had 15 minutes left?

I believe this is just one example of how students are being walked on and treated unfairly. It is this type of incident that continues to strain community relations between DPS and the student population.

The ticket is one matter, but the attitude of the student officer is another. I think it is this kind of attitude, though, that typifies the rest of the University, and I believe students shouldn't have to tolerate this. I think the DPS, administration, and others have forgotten that it is we, the students, who make this University what it is, and that we deserve as much respect and courtesy as anyone else on this campus!

Attack letters, not writers

Letters to the editor should be used for an intellectual exchange of views, not as a platform for launching a slanderous campaign against individuals.

Haider's letter, in the guise of a response (to the issues raised by Towghi) is really anything but that. Instead of refuting the statements, Haider embarks on an attack on Towghi's character a "low" blow by any standards.

What Haider should be concerned with are the questions Towghi raises about the humaneness of the Khomeni regime, and not with Towghi's immigration application. In fact, the obscene haste with which people are being disposed of by the new regime, would lead any rational person to ask the question that Towghi seems to be asking - by replacing the shah with Khomeni, has Iran merely leapt from the frying pan into the fire?

Haider's support of the Khomeni regime, in spite of his unwillingness or inability to defend it against Towghi's charges bring to mind Webster's definition of a fanatic - a person "marked by intense and uncritical devotion." Mr. Haider, does the shoe fit

Perhaps those women most anxious to bar men at the IM while they "sunbathe" (a barbarous custom, anyhow) topless are concerned lest those men discover that they have, in fact, nothing worth hiding. Most of the women attending school here have no compunction about submitting 95 percent of their surface area to public scrutiny; why not the other 5 percent?

Surely no part of any female (i.e. human) anatomy is so unique or precious as to demand this much security - let alone this much column space on the letters page. VIEWPOINT: NUCLEAR POWER

N-power one of life's risks

In your editorial, "How many must die first?" of April 30, you once again demonstrate the lack of insight and one-sidedness that The State News is so proficient at. You seem to see only what you want to see. Here comes the bandwagon, so let's jump on it.

If you're so concerned with people dying (when none have), why don't you protest the making of automobiles - they kill 50,000 people a year, not to mention pollution problems. Would you have let Henry Ford develop the automobile if we had known this would be the case? But we've learned to live with it, passively taking the risks. Cancer kills every day. There are people starving, there's disease, injustice and hatred that is more deadly than any nuclear plant. But you protest nuclear energy. You hit the streets with your flags, banners and speeches. It's the "in" thing to do. After all, we haven't had a good protest since the Vietnam War. Maybe Bob Dylan will even write a song about it. Wouldn't that be nifty. Meanwhile the world around us crumbles under the weight of more deadly ills which we seem blind to.

Now I'm not pro-nuke. I'm not anti-nuke. I'm neuter-nuke. But if you want to stop nuclear development as a source of energy, then tell the manufacturers to quit making and tell people to stop buying electric potato peelers, dishwashers, can openers, popcorn poppers, garage door openers and everything else that makes life that much lazier for them. Tell them to turn off their air conditioners, their lights, to dial down their heat, to accept rotating blackouts, to sacrifice. Then tell them that even if they do all this, their energy will cost more. But there won't be any more nukes (whew!). Will they do it? No!! Why not? Because we as a nation have come to expect and demand all the luxuries and conveniences that can be provided, yet we're unwilling to pay the bill that's come due. We want it all at no risk. Don't blame the government or the NRC, or Consumers Power Co.; they're only trying to supply and satisfy the demands of an insatiable societal appetite. Nuclear energy is simply a response to this increasing demand. Blame ourselves: we brought it about.

Your article reports that Babcock & Wilcox cut a "nifty deal" with the NRC to not shut down all plants so as to "avoid a full-scale nationwide debate on the nuclear issue." For your information, the nuclear issue is already a nationwide debate! Actually, the deal was "cut" to avoid the public outcry of increased consumer costs needed to buy that lost energy from elsewhere. Again, people don't want nukes, but they're unwilling to pay the price for something else.

to be the ones to tell people, "I'm sorry, but we're shutting off your power, we just closed your neighborhood nuclear plant. But don't worry, we'll have you on solar within five

I think it's about time we look at ourselves, at our needs and values, and try to affect change there. When we begin to demand less and to give more we will turn the corner towards constructive change. We're just spinning our wheels now. Nukes are dangerous, no question about it. But so is breathing. Where were the people 15 years ago when nuclear energy was still largely on the drawing board? No one cared then. All they wanted was the power. But now, as usual, it's too late. Sorry folks, nukes is here to stay and you'll do better to face up to the responsibility of handling the situation as best you can.

As for me, I'd rather protest the arms race, Idi Amin, gas guzzling cars, or the lights burning at the Capitol complex Furthermore, are you going at all hours of the night. In a world filled with risks we've created, I find living with one more no big deal. Besides, I've got to drive to work tomorrow.

VIEWPOINT: THE PANTREE

The atmosphere is fine, it's the service that's bad

In Mr. Stynes' Letter to the editor of April 26- inappropriately captioned "Pantree defended" - Stynes attacks an earlier letter (Viewpoint: Pantree, 4/24/79) by Mr. Pordominsky. Styne's castigation of Pordominsky for his alleged "selfishness" entirely missed the point of Pordominsky's piece. Pordominsky was not maligning the Pantree - quite the contrary, he emphatically stated that he greatly enjoys its fine decor, its atmosphere and even its management. What Pordominsky objects to - and with this I wholeheartedly concur - are the antics employed by one of the Pantree's managers, Mr. -, to "persuade" one to leave when he has somehow concluded your staying is no longer cost effective. Mr. - apparently views dining out at a public place as simply an occasion to gulp, gag and run. And when one doesn't shuffle out fast enough he seeks to ensure your speedy exit through such creative devices as (1) the unrefilled coffee cup, (2) the waitress returning every two minutes to ask if there will be anything else, and (3) the direct demand that your table be vacated.

What Mr. - fails to recognize is that the actual eating of the food is only a small part of the dining out experience. Many, if not most, times it is a social occasion — a chance to meet and converse with friends, talk over the day's events and ruminate about tomorrow's endeavors.

Stynes' implicit assumption that one should eat and get out in all due haste fails to jive with the practices of the great majority of restaurants in this area. Numerous times I've had to wait 45 minutes or an hour at the Pretzel Bell or the Cork and Cleaver before I could be seated, but that is part of the price one pays for dining out. But never at any other restaurant other than the Pantree - and there only when Mr. - is around - have I been systematically and persistently badgered to leave. A restaurant doesn't gain in the long run by tossing customers out its doors while they're still chewing their food to make room for a few

The Pantree is truly an enjoyable place at which to dine, but its attractiveness is considerably diminished by Mr. -'s efforts to raise the body count on his shift. The mentality he displays at the Pantree is more appropriate to an assembly line at Oldsmobile than to a restaurant selling service as much as food. Monta is a graduate student in philosophy

During the past year MSU has gone sports crazy. We're NCAA champs in basketball, co-Big Ten champs in football, with next year just as promising as this year. In my recent endeavor to poll the students on the proposed downtown arena project, I have grabbed a tiger by the tail. The sentiments, even by some of those working for the downtown pro- tween 4,000 and 6,000 more ject, are for an on-campus

This is where the tiger begins to roar. Its meaning is loud and clear - MSU cannot afford to build an arena of its own. Edgar Harden expressed the view that "there is no possibility, that we can build a fieldhouse without taxing the students to a point where we would be denying many of them educational opportunities far more important than a basketball palace of any kind." However, there are plans for a new IM facility which are under consideration, with the Board of Trustees possibly looking over the plans at their next meeting. The financing for this will be through an assessment of a student tax roughly equivalent to that needed for a sports

There were plans in 1970 for an on-campus arena, which would have been built where the football training facility is currently being erected. You may wonder why this arena had been defeated. The reason is pure and simple: student activism of the '60s carried over into the '70s, and students protested the construction of an arena. This group of students felt that there is too much emphasis on athletic activities; apparently they have gotten their point across as the arena project was defeated. Only four years later, plans for an IM building got under way. Today, this facility is almost a reality. I am not against either a new sports arena or IM facility, but what I am against is the lack of student input into decisions which have a great effect upon them. In an effort to ease your decision, here are the benefits offered by the two facilities:

would also be outside facilities which would include four interchangeable softball/football fields. The location of this facility would be on East Campus immediately south of the Life Science Building. A new arena on the other hand, would benefit the students by providing a larger arena. The arena is an organized effort on the students' part to give it the direction it needs. Student uprisal in the past decade has proved to be counter-productive. Whether we get a new sports arena or an IM building is ultimately dependent upon the Board of Trustees. Your opinion can influence their decision, only if you choose to express it. Today marks the first anniversary of Sun Day, the worldwide event created last year to bring the merits of solar power to the attention of the public. Although widely celebrated in the Lansing area one year ago, there is little happening this year to mark the

It seems particularly ironic, in light of the growing anti-nuclear movement, that alternate energy enthusiasts would not exploit this day to its full extend and proclaim loudly the potentials of

The development of solar power still has far to go and many obstacles to overcome. One of the largest obstacles it faces is the misunderstanding of a large number of people. Those that believe in the possibilities of solar are still largely outnumbered by those who regard it as foolish, unworkable or even impossible.

Many have a tendency to scoff and ask how the sun is going to run their television sets or stereo systems. Or they point to the fact that most solar systems have to be backed up by another form

While it is true that solar cannot at present provide the full amount of power needed at a cost that is at all reasonable, there are affordable means of using the sun and reducing consumption of gas and oil by significant amounts.

In Michigan and throughout the country, solar collectors are providing heat and hot water in amounts which are cutting oil consumptions as much as 50 percent. Although the initial cost is somewhat high, the systems will eventually pay for themselves in reduced fuel costs and also tax cuts available to reduce the original

Many of us are wary of solar power because its proponents also advocate conservation of gas and oil. We are afraid that we might not be able to continue to consume in the massive way in which we have been so long accustomed. But the reality is that we are running long on use and short on supplies and this cannot continue indefinitely. Reduced usage of conventional supplies must coincide with the development of any alternative energy sources.

Those who feel solar energy is not an alternative because it cannot presently meet our total energy requirements and thus see nuclear power as the answer might want to consider some limitations of nuclear energy.

In a recent article by New York syndicated columnist Tom Wicker it was pointed out that nuclear plants produce nothing but electricity and electricty accounts for only 10 percent of energy consumed annually.

Vince Taylor, U.S. Energy consultant, has estimated that replacing all gas and oil currently used for electricity production with nuclear energy would only put off critical oil shortages by about five years.

Nuclear power is no solution to the energy shortage, but is simply a method of borrowing time in a way that is extremely dangerous to the health of human beings.

As supplies of conventional fuels continue to decline and the dangers of nuclear power continue to unfold, the option of solar power must be more seriously considered. Today being Sun Day is as good a time as any to start doing something about it.

VIEWPOINT: SINGLE-SEX SWIMMING

We've demonstrated need

By KIMBERLY STANTON

I find it disappointing that Doyle Baker is unable to respond to the arguments of "Stanton et al" without first resorting to personal insult. As it happens, I am not a "woman chauvinist" nor a "neo-chauvinist." Such terms contribute nothing to a dialogue on the issue of single-sex swimming, but are designed to degrade myself and my colleagues in the eyes of the reading public. Apparently Baker has so little confidence in the merits of his own arguments that he is forced to rely instead on an unsubstantiated analysis of our personalities.

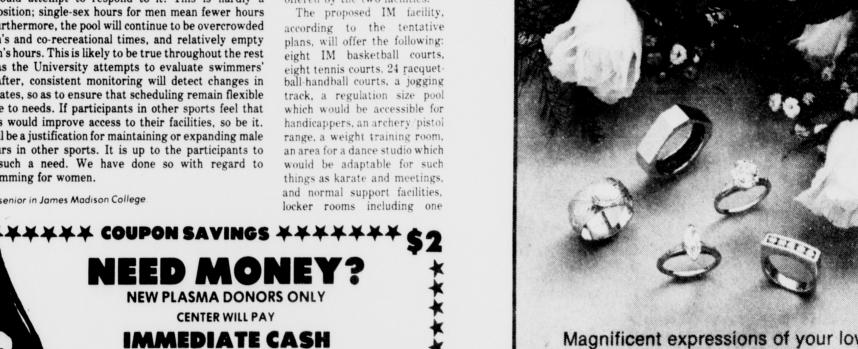

The items to which Baker referred as our "four listed 'rationales' for single-sex hour" were in fact presented as a partial explanation for the extraordinarily large proportion of women swimmers, a phenomenon which we took care to document. Without question, swimming is also an attractive sport for men, perhaps for many of the same reasons. The fact remains that by far the majority of swimmers on this campus are women.

Let us respond to the issue of sensitivity to the needs of others. It is precisely because the Circle IM has been sensitive to the needs of many different groups that a variety of programs have existed in the past. It should not be assumed that a need no longer exists without taking the time to find out - precisely the reason we support the University decision to survey participants of the swimming facilities. We expect the results to show that a very sizeable number of women prefer single-sex hours. The reasons are many and varied - for some, topless sunbathing; for others, an oft-observed male tendency to swim competitively, aggressively, and just plain rudely, bumping into and running over women. None of the reasons is universal, but they are all very real to the women thereby motivated to choose single-sex hours. Sensitivity must involve responding to people's needs.

Let me note that during Fall 1978, the number of men making use of the single-sex hours at Jenison was less than 300. In spite of that small number, we are not arguing that single-sex hours for men are unnecessary. We are arguing that men must also be allowed to demonstrate the need for such time, and if the need exists, the University should attempt to respond to it. This is hardly a self-serving position; single-sex hours for men mean fewer hours for women. Furthermore, the pool will continue to be overcrowded during women's and co-recreational times, and relatively empty during the men's hours. This is likely to be true throughout the rest of this term as the University attempts to evaluate swimmers' needs. Thereafter, consistent monitoring will detect changes in participation rates, so as to ensure that scheduling remain flexible and responsive to needs. If participants in other sports feel that such a process would improve access to their facilities, so be it. There may well be a justification for maintaining or expanding male single-sex hours in other sports. It is up to the participants to demonstrate such a need. We have done so with regard to single-sex swimming for women.

Binder' a fascinating production

By ROSANNE SINGER

State News Reviewer "I womanize and I'm a drunkard, and I'm not afraid to say that to the whole world," says the title character in Vijay Tendulkar's violent Indian play, Sakharam Binder, now appearing in the Arena Theatre. Banned in Bombay in 1972, the play breaks through the hypocrisy of traditional Indian society where outward decorum may mask drunkenness, wife abuse and infidelity. Sakharam is a violent, overbearing man but displays the single virtue of

A book binder in a small town in the West Central Indian region of Maharashtra, Sakharam welcomes women into his home who have run away or been cast out by husbands. These women perform as both his servants and concubines.

The Arena Theatre production of this play features strong performances and a careful recreation of the appropriate Indian setting. Director Farley Richmond has established the play's locale with actual props from the region and authentic costumes Mohammad Ghaffari is an excellent choice for the middleaged, alcoholic Sakharam. Physically he is fleshy, dissipated looking and intense. He captures Sakharam's violent nature but also the humor of the character as he alters from a bullying master to a victimized lover. One problem with Ghaffari's performance is an insecurity with the English language that occasionally distracts from the power of his lines. He also tends to gesture angrily in a repetitive manner.

From the moment she saunters onstage, Martha Terry establishes herself as the brazen, foul-mouthed, temperamental Champa. She is fiery and performs with a concentration that is exciting to watch. She is amusing as she exerts control over men, causing them to scramble to serve her in a society where women wait upon men. A questionable aspect of her portrayal is the degree to which she disregards Indian manners and seems extremely Western in her behavior and attitude.

Kathy Kessler enacts a carefully developed Lakshmi, a meek traditional woman who progresses from silent dejection to self-righteous conviction. Kessler handles the character's transitions in behavior smoothly. In physical bearing and gestures she provides a necessary contrast to Terry's Bernie White portrays a charming and expressive Dawood, Sakharam's Muslim friend. With little effort White conveys his every thought and emotion and performs with considerable ease onstage. Dennis Arning as Champa's masochistic, cowering husband, Fouzdar Shinde, looks physically out of place in this cast and appears too Western. Since the others look reasonably foreign, his difference is jarring. He perfectly projects Shinde's quivering, groveling manner, but his speech is occasionally

John McLaughlin tonight

Guitarist John McLaughlin will be appearing for two shows tonight at 7:30 and 10 p.m. in Erickson Kiva, McLaughlin will be performing with his newest group of supporting musicians, the One Truth Band.

McLaughlin's involvement with the guitar began in the early '50s, beginning with the interest in Chicago blues and later, the works of John Coltrane and Miles Davis. Between 1964 and 1967 he was involved in the British pub music scene.

Disillusionment with the possibilities in this type of music led McLaughlin to begin his explorations into comtemporary jazz. In 1969 he joined the historic Tony Williams Lifetime, one of the ground -break ing rock/jazz fusion bands. During the next few years, he also worked with Miles Davis on the Bitches Brew and and In A Silent Way albums, among others - although he turned down an offer to leave Lifetime and officially join Miles' band.

After two years with Tony Williams, McLaughlin went off on his own, recording a number of LPs under his own name and working with two separate incarnations of his Mahavishnu

In 1973 McLaughlin formed the all-acoustic quartet Shakti, and for the next three years his music showed his interest in Indian Music. His love for the electric jazz/rock led him to return to that style on his next album, Johnny McLaughlin, Electric Guitarist. For his current tour, McLaughlin is working with his One Truth Band, which features Tony Smith, Stu Goldberg, Alyrio Lima, Fernando Sanders and L. Shankar.

Tickets for tonight's show are available for $6 at the Union Ticket Office, Wherehouse Records, Castellani's Market, and Flat, Black and Circular.

'Time Steps': solid family drama

By ROSANNE SINGER State News Reviewer

Family unity is a rapidly diminishing American phenomenon. However, it is a myth people relinquish reluctantly; nostalgia often colors family memories and reunions. Time Steps, now appearing at the BoarsHead Theater, is a new play that exposes the underlying tensions and jealousies of one family, the Saarinens.

Alexander Saarinen Sr., a retired auto worker, his wife and three sons gather at a summer esttage in the Irish Hills for the first time in years. The three sons have little in common with one another, their father has little affection for them and their mother loves them blindly. Crises arise that only aggravate their differences and mutual dis-

This first play by Detroiter Gus Kaikkonen, a professional actor living in New York, is well balanced and structured. with parallel subplots developing in believable fashion. Kaikkonen seems to have taken extreme care that no sub-plot occupies a disproportionate amount of stage time and that no action occurs spontaneously, without suitable preparation.

Because of the number of subplots, however, transitions cause problems and action often fails to flow smoothly between one scene and the next. Abrupt entrances and exits often cause uncomfortable confrontations.

The character of Donald Starinen, the oldest son, seems particularly undeveloped, partially because he is so rarely onstage. However, it is difficult to grasp what he is like - as a father to his teenage daughter, as a man

Kaikkonen has avoided the pitfall of injecting high tragedy into his play, dramatizing effectively the everyday confrontations and crises that comprise family life. The commonplace tragedies of failed love relationships and inability to accept old age provide sufficient and touching material. The second act of Time Steps is especially wellwritten and contains a hilarious misunderstanding.

The BoarsHead production of Time Steps is solid. However, in conveying the tensions and awkwardness of a family get-together, the actors themselves often seem uncomfortable. This is mainly evident in the first act, and from the second act on this decreases.

John Peakes gives a strong performance as the father who must deal with a gradually debilitating disease. He conveys his physical condition believably and his pitiful inability to control his body. He such as when she moves from sadness to a joyful, "Isn't to good to be back home." Doug Schirner portrays the middle son, Robert, who mood it often sounds forced, avoids emotional confrontations and has few scruples. Schirner captures the aimlessness and irresponsible nature of Robert but lacks depth. Apparently from the play's lines, Robert is filled with a worldweariness and contemplates suicide. How ever. Schirner only superficially expresses that aspect.

Laural Merlington Schirner has a difficult part to play as Robert's bizarre, unhappy wife, Sara. She seems uncomfortable with the role and occasionally delivers her lines in awkward jabs. She also jumps on other actors' lines with her reactions.

David Montee plays the youngest son, Alex, a troubled, ineffectual young man. Although Montee lacks some ease with quiet, emotional encounters he gains assurance as the play progresses. However, he plays the part with little warmth, evoking minimal sympathy for his personal

Cacho Tirao visits MSU

By MELINDA WILSON

State News Staff Writer East Lansing is swell as far as cities go, but I hope Cacho Tirao sees more of our country and we see more of him when the Argentinian classical quitarist next visits.

Though the 38-year-old Tirao has toured extensively in Europe and Latin America and released two LPs on the Columbia label, he had never visited the States before. And, East Lansing is his only stop before Mexico.

The Buenos Aires native is making his only U.S. appearances this week on campus, thanks to arrangements made by his friend, MSU art Professor Owen Brainard.

Brainard is a drummer from 'The Geriatric Six Plus 1", a iazz ensemble composed mainly of MSU professors. He met Tirao while playing in a jazz band during a stay last year in Buenos Aires. Tirao made a guest appearance with the Geriatric Six at the annual Bosses' Luncheon Wednesday at the Kellogg Center, and will perform at a fund-raising dinner May 4. He will also present a guitar workshop and concert Saturday from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. in the Music Building Auditorium on

Stratton-Nelson bids East Lansing farewell

By DANIEL J. WATTS

State News Staff Writer Quiz Time. Besides music, what does the Stratton-Nelson Band have in common with the Beatles, Sonny and Cher and Simon and Garfunkel? Well, like they say, all good things must come to an end. East Lansing's favorite sons of show band music have called it quits after last Saturday's permer Paige MacDonald along with two new members, have formed a new group with a familiar ring - The Stratton Brothers. However, with the departure of Mark Nelson, the band is ending a successful combination that lasted nearly five years.

Since their first gig in August 1974 in Valley Court Park in East Lansing, Stratton-Nelson won a loyal following. Although they weren't as polished or theatrical the first time out, it wasn't long before the group developed their own unique stage and music show. _ sets were real treats. Stratton-Nelson had a number of things that clicked. First of all, their identification with MSU attracted a student following. Of course it didn't hurt to change a few lyrics. The original Beach Boys' recording of a popular hit didn't include: "And I can't wait to get to Michigan State, back to the cutest girls in the world." Even without their rah-rah MSU spirit, Stratton-Nelson made it on their blend of skills and personalities. The addition of drummer Paige MacDonald strengthened their vocals, which was their forte in the first place. Combined with solid work on the guitars, keyboard and drums, the band was versatile in different styles.

It wasn't just music, and it wasn't school spirit that kept people coming back to see the band. There was a stage presence; and rapport with the audience that isn't found on the local entertainment level. The original songs, skits and jokes But this isn't an obituary. People who waited in line at the Peanut Barrel and got a seat for the final performance were not disappointed. With their usual Motown, Beach Boys and Bee Gees medlies, interspersed with original tunes, the crowd heard vintage Stratton-Nelson.

Typical of the band, they brought the audience along. With each set the crowd's enthusiasm picked up. It might have been that third or fourth pitcher, regardless, the mood was buoyant and the final two

Seniors lead MSU into tourney

By DAVE JANSSEN

State News Sports Writer It's been a hard season for the MSU women's softball team. Not only has it compiled the worst regular season record since its existence, 17-16, it also dropped its first Big Ten championship. To top it all off, the first annual MSU Invitational was washed out just when it looked like the Spartans had started to put it all

The win one, lose one pattern that MSU has been stuck in most of the season has, however, probably been the most disappointing to those who are playing their last softball for MSU. But the seniors - Pam Berlinski, Carol Hutchins, Carmen King, Nancy Lyons and Sherrie Sprangle - are not through yet. Today, MSU is at Grand Valley State Colleges to open state tournament play with a 9:30 a.m. game against Oakland University and the seniors say they are ready to help the team get into the regionals once again. 'We've always been a tournament team," Berlinski said. "I have confidence that we'll come on this weekend."

Of all the Spartans, no one could act as a better team spokesperson than the MSU catcher. Berlinski has been around longer (five years) than any other of this year's Spartans, even fourth year coach Dianne Ulibarri. In Berlinski's four seasons, the Spartans have finished first in the state tournament twice and second once. The MSU veteran missed out on another state championship when she had to sit out with an ankle injury in 1977. Along with Hutchins, Berlinski is the only senior on the team that was a starter during MSU's magical 1976 season when it won the national championship. During and since that time, she has been an important figure - the primary handler - of the Spartan pitching staff. Hutchins, a freshman as the Spartan shortstop at that time, has no trouble remembering the 1976 national championship. Asked how she felt after winning it, "Hutch" replied, "It was indescribable. I wouldn't think any less of it than Earvin did There's nothing that "Hutch" would like better than to be able to reflect upon a state championship after this weekend. To do this, she feels that the second-seeded Spartans will have to play well against No. 1 seed Western Michigan University. "I think it's between us and them (WMU)," the MSU field general said. "They are our biggest rival -

we love to play them and love to beat 'em. I think we can beat them this weekend.

Another Spartan that is not accustomed to losing is leftfielder King. The leading slugger on this year's team, King was a reserve on the 1976 championship squad. But collegiate softball is not the only place where she has contributed to a winning team.

The MSU regular leftfielder for the past three seasons is a member of the Taylor Sporting Good Stingers, a slow-pitch team, during the summer. She has helped her team to finishes of no lower than third in the last five years, including first in 1975 in the prestigious World's Tournament. And though she is up for the draft after this season and it is rumored that the Connecticut Falcons, a professional fast-pitch team is interested in her, King is not

"We intend to play like there's no tomorrow," King said. "We're going to take them one at a time and play as best as we can and just hope every-

thinking past this weekend.

While King may be providing much of the Spartan power this weekend, pitching will be equally important if MSU is going to win. One of the pitchers the Spartans may be relying heavily upon this weekend is one that they have looked to plenty of times during her four years here.

After what she called mostly a learning year where she saw action mostly in relief as a freshman, Lyons has been one of the mainstays of MSU pitching staff over the past three seasons.

Though she realizes the importance of the pitching, Lyons said that in order to win this weekend, MSU has to solve a different kind of problem. "In some of the biggest games our problem has been playing to the level of competition we're up to," Lyons explained. "Every game we have to give 600 percent, whether the opponent is 0-24 or 24-0." As Lyons points out, the physical part is only one-half of the game. "We have the players and the talent and we've wme through before," she said. "It comes down to being mentally

The other half of MSU's senior mound corps is Sprangle, the only Spartan senior that did not start her collegiate career at MSU. In her freshman year, Sprangle was over at Jackson Community College doing a large part in the building of a softball program there, leading the team with a personal record

Sprangle evaluated her role and the role of the other MSU pitchers in the state tournament. "It's hard because you're not in the game all the time and when you do come in you're the main part of the show," she said. "The pitchers sets the tempo of the game. If the pitcher's not on, the rest of the team kind of falls apart." Hitting will have to be there too this weekend if MSU is going to win it, according to Sprangle. She explained that no matter how they try, the pitchers aren't going to be able to completely hold down all of the teams. Sprangle said there's ao way to get away from having to score some runs. Though Sprangle has been around the least number of years of the seniors, she is not the least excited about the state townament. "Last year we got seat in the regionals and I've oeen burning up since then," she said. "I'd love to go mrough and win it this year.' In order to do that, Sprangle and the rest of the Spartans know the first step is a state championship. Linda Ascuitto, sophomore rightfielder cited the valuability of the seniors to the team, especially during this weekend. She noted the dependability of pitchers Sprangle and Lyons, the arm and bat of King and the all-around leadership of Hutchins and Berlinski. "But most of it, Ascuitto said, "is the experience that they give us during the games." As King would tell you, not only the seniors but everybody on the team is fired up for the big weekend. The Spartans have the potential and they don't want to be shut out of the regionals for the first time. All the players are ready to give

It may be luck, but who's complaining?

By JERRY BRAUDE State News Sports Writer Leaning against the fence down the left-field line of Kobs Field, junior right-handed pitcher Jay Strother tried to explain his emergence as the

"I've felt lucky so far." Strother said as he relaxed on a day off between doubleheader games with Central Michigan University Tuesday. "I don't have the speed of (Mark) Pomorski or the breaking curve of (Brian) Wolcott, but I've had enough to get by.

Spartans' top pitcher this year.

Strother may call his success ucky, but it has probably taken more than that to throw two consecutive shutouts in as many Big Ten appearances and boast the team's lowest earned run average (except for Risto Nicevski, who has allowed no runs in three innings) with a 2.16 mark.

importantly, But more Strother's Big Ten shutouts came at crucial times in finishing the four-game conference weekend. His 5-0 win over University of Wisconsin and 1-0 win over University of Illinois allowed the Spartans to finish the first two weekends with 3-1 marks instead of settling for .500 ball. Hence, Strother has been a key reason for the Spartans being on top of the Big Ten.

"Mostly, the defense has really been behind me this year, like Rodger Bastien and Tom Schultz coming up with the big plays against Illinois," Strother said.

One person who doesn't find Strother's performances to be so lucky is coach Dan Litwhiler. "He's as good a pitcher as he was last year," Litwhiler said. "We expected him to do well for us this year, but we didn't expect him to throw shutouts like these, though. He has a good attitude and is always in shape. He doesn't get upset either.

One of Strother's main attributes is his pitching control, which keeps him from defeating himself.

"Except for Sunday's game with Illinois," Strother added. "I walked too many guys (five). I kept on walking the first guy of the inning and that's the biggest sin of pitching.

But the Pittsburgh, Pa. product was under tough pressure as the Illini left 10 runners stranded.

"My slider came through for me," Strother said. "The team also turned over some double plays for me when I dug myself into a hole.

His slider may have been his "bread-and-butter" pitch Sunday but Strother also throws a fast ball, curve, screwball and is now working on a change-up.

"The change-up should help me to be more effective," he said. "But it is also the hardest pitch to throw. But I don't want to change a thing now or else I may get into trouble.

Strother also attributes his success to his catchers Jerry Pollard and Mark Russ. "They've done an excellent job," Strother said. "They've known me for a couple of years. They know what I like to throw

Derby is no place for children

By BILL MOONEY

There's fixin' to be an ambush when Spectacular Bid goes to the post at 5:38 p.m. EDT Saturday as the odds-on choice for the 105th running of the Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs in Louisville, Ky. Hardly a thoroughbred handicapper in the country will deny that he's the best of his three-year-old peers at this point, but Triple Crown races don't always go to the best or fastest. Indications are that he and his young jockey, Ronnie Franklin, might be in for the roughest roller coaster ride of their careers and should that be the case it is quite possible future editions of the Daily Racing Form will make a notation next to Spectacular Bid's name that reads "beaten favorite."

Yep. Despite all the hoopla and drama and headlines he's been getting in recent months, despite all the media hype, he could lose. In his final Derby tune-up in the mile and one-eighth Blue Grass Stakes at Keeneland last Thursday, Spectacular Bid beat a very small and wholeheartedly unimpressive field in the slow time of 1:50. Not since Dust Commander took the Blue Grass in 1970 - against such endangered species as Corn off the Cob and Naskra (not exactly household names, eh?) - has a colt won his final prep race in so lackluster a time and then gone on to take the big one. And an argument can be made that Dust Commander's victory was a fluke. He took the mile and one-quarter Derby in the mediocre time of 2:03.6. He finished out of the money in the Preakness and in 18 starts afterward won only one more race.

For sure, Spectacular Bid has won all of his starts this year, some of them impressively. But when watching films of his races one often receives the impression that he rarely runs to his full ability. He has a tendency to loaf through the first quarter mile and . . . well . . . well there's no getting around it, his rider is a question mark. Ronnie Franklin has made a lot of mistakes while on this horse and had he run up against some genuine opposition in either the Blue Grass or the near disastrously embarrassing Florida Derby, he probably would not now be riding the favorite at all.

The question has often been put to Spectacular Bid's trainer Buddy Delp: why not replace the kid with someone more experienced, like Jorge Velasquez or Bill Shoemaker? There's little question that Delp seriously considered doing that after the Florida Derby, but following consultations with the horse's owner, Harry Meyerhoff of Maryland's Hawksworth Farm, the decision was made to keep Franklin up. Things looked good when they took the Flamingo at Hialeah - a race in which Franklin rode Spectacular Bid most professionally - but that one-five-zero in the Blue Grass was startling. Even the normally exuberant Delp was deeply bothered by it, and he privately admitted to a few reporters that his horse had not received the proper workout he needed.

The whole situation is complicated by the relative mystery that surrounds the opposition that Spectacular Bid will face Saturday. Flying Paster has shipped in from California: he has raced 14 times in his career has 10 wins, come in second twice, third once and has bankrolled $717,060. In the first race he ever ran he cruised five furlongs (five-eighths of a mile) in :57.4. The times for his mile and one-eighth preps have been excellent. His jockey, 42-year-old Don Pierce, has won some 3,300 races in his lifetime, easily placing him in the top 20 in that category. But how much newspaper space have Pierce and his mount received received? Compared to Spectacular Bid and Franklin, virtually

There are other horses, many of whom after slowly developing now seem to be reaching their peaks. In a wonderful cavalry charge two weeks ago, Instrument Landing just lasted to win the Wood Memorial at Aqueduct in New York going the mile and one-eighth in 1:49.2. He's not a sure starter in the Derby, but Screen King who closed very fast in the Wood to lose by only a nose will definitely be there. As will Secretariat's son, General Assembly, ridden by the remarkable Laffit Pincay Jr..General Assembly has been a disappointment this year, but one of these days he's going to run a big race. If anyone can bring that race out of him, Pincay will.

If Spectacular Big is going to win, this is what Franklin must do: he's got to press his foot on the accelerator as soon as the starting gate opens and gun his horse to the front. It will be a bold move and take a lot of courage. But if he doesn't he better look out, because he'll find the rail shut off and if he goes to the outside he may get bumped all the way to the Ohio River. Horses and their jockeys simply do not get disqualified for roughness in the Kentucky Derby - it has never happened, not even once. As a verteran tout would surely tell the rider of Spectacular Bid, "you're good, kid, but in this one you ain't ridin' against no maidens."

MSU head basketball coach Jud Heathcote announced that the NCAA champion Spartans have signed their fourth and last recruit of the season to a national letter of intent.

Heathcote thinks highly of his newest prize. "I consider him to be an outstanding prospect. We will play him as a power forward or a small center. He has tremendous potential and needs only to play with stronger players to make improvement,"

Perez, a native of the Dominican Republic, averaged 21 points and 15 rebounds a game this past season when his team went 22-3 and was a regional finalist. In his junior season, Perez led his team to the class D

PLANS TO MAKE PALISADES EARTHQUAKE-SAFE

N-plant shut at least two weeks

SOUTH HAVEN (UPI) -Consumers Power Co.'s Palisades nuclear power plant will be closed for at least two weeks while engineers shore up backup reactor cooling systems, utility officials said Wednesday.

David Bixel, a nuclear licensing administrator, said an analysis of stress codes done while reviewing plans to replace two defective steam generators revealed two emergency backup piping systems may be unable to cope with as much pressure as they are supposed to should an earthquake rock the area.

The problem involves braces holding some 100 feet of 12-inch diameter piping running from two 7,500 gallon water reservoirs to the plant's reactor

Bixel said if a strong earthquake hit the area, those braces might give way. He said engineers are working on modifications that must be made before the plant reopens and were expected to have the problem solved in about two weeks.

Bixel said the piping systems in question at the $185 million plant are just two of several and would come into play only if the plant's primary cooling system failed. He said there are two similar piping systems plus a half dozen others involving low and high pressure pumps.

"I don't think the system would fail." Bixel said. "But we would like a better margin of safety than it looks like we

HOW TO TURN HOT LITTLE TOOTSIES INTO COLD HARD CASH!

EARN OVER $650 A MONTH RIGHT THROUGH YOUR SENIOR YEAR.

If you're a junior or senior majoring in sciences like math, physics or engineering, the Navy has a program you should know about.

It's called the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate- with a Navy representative Collegiate Program (NUPOC-C for short) and if you qualify, you can earn as much as $650 a month right through your senior year. Then after 16 weeks of Officer Candidate School, you'll get an additional year of advanced technical education. This would cost thousands in a civilian school, but in the Navy, we pay you.

It isn't easy. There are fewer than 400 openings and only one of every six applicants will be selected. But if you make it, you'll have unequaled hands-on responsibility, a $24,000 salary in four years, and giltedged qualifications for jobs both in the Navy and out.

Ask your placement officer to set up an interview when he visits the campus, or contact your Navy representative at 800-841-8000, or send in the coupon. The NUPOC-C Program. Not only can it help you complete college. It can be the start of an exciting career.

No one wants to build special handicapper bus

WASHINGTON (AP) - No one bid on a contract to build 530 transit buses for three cities Wednesday, perhaps killing a Transportation Department project to make bus riding easier for elderly citizens and handicappers.

The bids were to have been opened in Philadelphia. While the two major American bus manufacturers had already said they were not interested, Transportation Secretary Brock Adams said he had hoped one or more foreign companies might bid.

Adams said Wednesday he was "deeply disappointed" at the absence of bids. He said a scientific review panel will be asked "to analyze the bus specifications, performances and costs and to advise me and the public whether this new bus can be produced and built for a reasonable price."

The project, called Transbus, has been controversial since it was proposed in 1971. Rules finally adopted last year require that all

Good pizza people don't stay put.

Keeping good people is one of our biggest problems here at Domino's Pizza. And it's not the work - Oh sure, the nighttime hours are a little rough, and with our 30 minute delivery policy, our drivers are pretty busy most of the evening. But our pizza people tell us that time passes quickly when you're busy and the pay is top in the area. So what's the problem?

Well, Domino's Pizza is growing fast, and we grow from within. That means drivers soon become manager trainees and then managers. And store managers soon become interested in bigger things, like Domino's Pizza franchises and area distributorships. We're always short of good pizza people because good people don't seem to stay put. That's the problem, and we think it's a healthy one.

Why not stop in at one of our stores and fill out an employment application. If you're qualified, we would like to make you a part of the problem.

If you are interested in becoming a management trainee, send your resume to: 'Joyce White, 6300 W.

Senate seeks resolution toward battle on wetland protection issue

By JAMES V. HIGGINS United Press International

The Senate plodded toward a resolution of the wetlands protection issue Wednesday as sponsors continued their winning string on amendments they view as unfavorable.

The action represented a fourth day of Senate debate on the embattled measure, with dozens of controversial amendments still

Senate leaders said they hoped to end the lengthy floor battle late Thursday and bring the bill to a vote. Sponsors of the measure have been able in past days to defeat major opposition amendments, many of which were acknowledged attempts to scuttle the bill. That pattern continued Wednesday as the Senate rejected amendments which would have required the state to survey all protected wetlands, require a statewide inventory of wetlands resources and force the DNR to notify landowners by registered letter of new restrictions on their wetland properties. The bill would prohibit the Praining, filling or other

Department of Natural Resources. Wetlands are defined as areas which are saturated for a sufficient length of time each year to support the growth of aquatic developmental use of any wetland unless a permit is issued by the

Environmentalists strongly support the measure, which is opposed with equal fervor by developers and real estate interests, the Upper Peninsula mining and logging industries and the Michigan State Chamber of Commerce.

Sen. John Welborn, who said he considers the measure government larceny, again failed to win support for amendments requiring that the state pay for an official survey of all wetland areas it wants to protect - erasing any doubt by the landowners whether his property is affected.

Opponents said the amendment was too expensive and unnecessary, and the proposal was shouted down on a voice vote. Backers of the bill used the same argument against a proposal from Sen. Harry Gast, R-St. Joseph, that the state send a registered letter notifying each landowner who owns a restricted wetland. It failed on a tied vote, 14-14.

"It was too expensive to buy the property. Then it was too expensive to survey it. Now it's too expensive to notify," Welborn

The Senate also defeated amendments from Sen. William Sederburg, R-East Lansing, that would postpone the full impact of the bill until a statewide wetlands inventory is completed.

Although the Sederburg language was defeated, 15-11, backers said they will take another look at the inventory question. Sen. Stephen Monsma, D-Grand Rapids, said he plans within a week to introduce a bill calling for a survey of all state land resources, not just of wetlands. In another development, Sen. Joseph S. Mack, D-Ironwood, arch-foe of the wetlands bill, said he plans to meet Thursday with

Gov. William G. Milliken to discuss the measure. Milliken is on record supporting wetlands preservation, but he just returned from a tour of the U.P. - where the bill is extremely

Mack said earlier this week he wanted to fly the entire Senate to the U.P. for a firsthand look at the measure's impact on the region, but apparently was unable to persuade Senate leaders to approve

House Ethics Committee to consider dismissing charges against Diggs

WASHINGTON (UPI) - The House Ethics Committee will vote May 16 on Rep. Charles Diggs' request for dismissal of the misconduct charges against him, and will take no action on the disorderly conduct arrest of Rep. Michael Myers, D-Pa., it was disclosed Wednesday.

Rep. Charles Bennett, D-Fla., the committee chairperson, told panel members they should be prepared to vote two weeks from now on the dismissal motion filed by Diggs, D-Mich.

Bennett also suggested that no action be taken against Myers. The committee agreed without dissent.

Diggs, the senior black in Congress, is appealing a threevear prison sentence handed down last fall following his federal court conviction on 29 mail fraud and payroll padding charges.

Myers, 35, was arrested Jan. 16 after an altercation between members of his party and employees in a motel lounge in suburban Virginia. Two employees claimed Myers and his friends assaulted them.

Bennett said Myers' case "does not rise to the level of severity to warrant a recommendation of disciplinary action to the House.'

Bennett noted that a staff investigation indicates the case may ultimately be dropped and Myers' record cleared because he was a first offender.

In the Diggs case, the Michigan Democrat's lawyers argued that the committee cannot judge the conduct of a House member during previous sessions of Congress since voters have re-elected him with full knowledge of his conviction. If the panel refuses to drop its investigation, the attorneys said, it should at least delay it

Environment group holds meeting today

The East Lansing Environmental Quality Advisory Committee is holding a public information meeting 7:30 tonight at 54-B District Court, 301 M.A.C. Ave. to report on its environmental recommendations.

The committee is part of the city's Comprehensive Plan revision process and will suggest a variety of possible environmental actions for East Lansing to incorporate into its new city development plan. Some ideas include encouraging water conservation practices, limiting or prohibiting urban development in wetlands areas, water pollution control measures affecting the Red Cedar River and the establishment of a citywide recycling system. Community members are encouraged to attend the meeting to offer comments on the committee's initial report. Copies of the Environmental Quality Inventory and an outline of the preliminary recommendations are available in City Hall, 410

Because of the overcrowd-"About 75 percent of our students enter advertising because of its good job reputation," Miracle said. "We also have some former business (30 percent) majors who transferred into our department." Miracle said flexibility is another reason people choose advertising. "Our program allows students to draw from a wide range of experiences." he said. "Students only have to take 30 to 35 credits in advertising. They also take required courses in sociology and psychology outside the department," he added. To gain the reputation

MSU's advertising department has, a highly skilled staff is needed, Miracle said.
