

Young Sculptor Creates Evanescent Art in Ice

Flyer Turns Speed Boat Designer

SCULPTORS these days seem to be going in for unusual media for expression of their talents. Ralph Rrriaga, young Mexican member of the chef's staf at the Hotel Morrison in Chicago, is one of them. And, strangely enough, he chose ice, probably the most impermanent material available for sculpture, as his medium. Although his statues and statuettes melt quickly, they serve as delightfully different decorations for the hotel's dining room, so the sculptor's work is not futile after all. Mr. Rrriaga is adept at reproducing a variety of subjects in ice, but his speciality is baskets for flowers.

STREAMLINES are here to stay, according to E. L. Remelin, a senior pilot for one of the passenger air lines. He is pictured here with his new streamlined racing outboard speed boat, which he built to attempt to lower the world speed boat record. Mr. Remelin's method of streamlining his boat is interesting as a new development of speed boat design. The stern of the boat is rounded off and the outboard motor is housed in a streamlined cowl. Remelin hopes to increase the speed of his boat by two miles an hour by thus reducing air resistance. At present he is tuning up the boat for a race.

A New Variant of Rainmaking

World's Fair 'Twins'

RAINMAKERS never yet have succeeded in realizing their dreams, but hope springs eternal in the human breast. Two young men of Westcliff, England, have invented what they call a "home rainmaker." Their invention consists of a sponge soaked in a liquid which they call "solution 77." According to the inventors, this solution has the power of attracting water into anything containing it. A field sprayed with the liquid, they assert, will remain moist whether it rains or not. The "rainmaker," they believe, holds great possibilities for farmers and nurserymen. The two inventors, E. L. Gilbert (with glasses) and J. Tinley, are shown at work in their laboratory.

MEMBERS of the staf of workers employed on the Swift bridge at A Century of Progress are having difficulty distinguishing between two of their number. As this picture shows, the two men look so much alike that few could easily tell them apart. The man on the right is Dr. Eric DeLamarter, associate conductor of the Chicago Symphony orchestra. His "twin" is Wally Roach, associated with a marionette show on the bridge.

Chore of a Modern Salt

ONE of the meanest jobs a sailor has to tackle aboard a modern ocean liner is polishing the brass whistles and sirens at the top of the huge funnels. This spectacular picture of members of the crew of the liner Malolo working atop one of the huge funnels reveals the difficulty of the job. The ship was making 23 knots at the time this picture was taken. It is traditional with seafaring men that, above all else, their vessels must be kept spotlessly clean. The Malolo plies the Pacific between the west coast and Hawaii.

HERE are winning ship models entered in a competition conducted recently at Santa Barbara, Cal., in connection with the marine festival held annually at that city. The yearly festival continues for one week at the southern California resort. Among the winners in the model contest were reproductions in miniature of the Mayflower, the Constitution, Spanish galleons, and a Mediterranean fishing barge. Shown in the picture, with seven of the winning models, is William R. Stone, builder of the miniature ships. He is holding a model of the clipper ship Gloria. A feature of the model ship contest was a marine parade of all the models entered. More than a hundred models were in the line, which was towed along the harbor in view of hundreds of festival spectators.
