

A Victim of Fire Rebuilt

DESTROYED in the big fire which swept the Chicago stockyards last spring was fire engine 59, shown at left in the upper photo. Although the truck appeared to be a total loss, engineers of the city's fire department decided it could be rebuilt for less money than would be required to replace it with a new truck. The wrecked engine was sent to the fire department shops and there completely rebuilt. How it looks today is shown in the lower picture. The cost of rebuilding was $3,200. A new truck costs $13,000. Shown in the lower picture beside the truck are John Stackpool, superintendent of equipment, and Michael Buckley, supervising engineer. Several months were required to rebuild the truck.

Safeguarding Miners

HERE are pictured some of the newest devices for the protection of coal miners. The respirators, safety lamps, and other gadgets were exhibited recently at the Crystal Palace in London. The occasion was the International Co-operative exhibition. The coal mining safety device display was presented as a tableau, in which the use of the various safety appliances was demonstrated. Much progress has been made toward reducing mine accidents in England and in other countries in which the coal mining industry is large, yet the annual death toll from mine explosions and disasters is still heavy. Constant vigilance by mine officials must be maintained in addition to the use of safety devices.

33 Inches of Parsnip

THIS giant parsnip, exhibited recently at a vegetable show in Horticultural hall, London, measured 33½ inches in length. The parsnip, as might be supposed, won first prize for the largest vegetable, and was easily the winner in the parsnip division. It was grown by J. R. Smith of Watford, England, who named it "tender and true." Two small vegetable enthusiasts are shown measuring the huge parsnip with a ruler. Parsnips, scientifically known as pastinaca sativa, have been cultivated in England since the time of the Romans.

A Fierce Aquatic Battle

DEADLY combat in a stagnant pool would be an appropriate description of this picture. The battle is between two caddis flies, which have just emerged from the pupa stage. Above them is a diving beetle, staring at the fight with bulging eyes. Near by a snail, true to form, dozes unconcernedly.

Record Breaking Plane Model

IRVING OHLSSON of Los Angeles is shown with his model plane, which holds the national altitude and flight endurance records. In a recent contest the model soared 5,300 feet and stayed in the air for 1 hour, 3 minutes, and 10 seconds. The model is gas driven. In the recent contest the small plane soared so high that the judges sent up a real airplane to check its altitude. The contest was held in connection with the California state fair at Sacramento. Young Ohlsson built the plane himself.

Model of 'Old Ironsides'

THIS model of the Constitution, famous old frigate of the United States navy, is carved of wood. It was exhibited this summer in the Hall of Science at A Century of Progress Exposition. The model is about five feet long and is accurate in its scale measurements. The builder is Theodore Morales of Evanston, Ill.

An Advertising Hat

THIS ingenious headdress has commercial value. It revolves and may be illuminated. It was exhibited recently in Paris at the Concours Lepine, a display of new inventions. The "hat" shown here is designed for the display of advertising signs. If the invention becomes popular "sandwich" men soon may have additional advertising space on which to proclaim their messages.

As Above, So Below
