

"A FAST CONVOY," by Burnell Poole, is the second of a series of World war paintings being donated by R. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. for exhibition at the United States Naval academy. It depicts the destroyer Allen and other destroyers rolling and pitching in rough weather as they escort the troop ship Leviathan through the war zone.

THE MUSHERS ARE MUSHING on the Tahoe trail in California, putting their huskies in condition for the Sierra dog derby, which will be run as a 30-mile round trip between Truckee and Tahoe in February. Scotty Allen, famous Alaskan driver, appears in the workout here.

(Photograph from Wide World.)

ICE - LOCKED — When one's ship comes in in the winter time it is apt to look like the interior of an iceless refrigerator. This one, the fishing trawler Holy Cross, got its covering not far from Boston.

(Photo from Pacific & Atlantic.)

THE WATCH ON THE RHINE—The British royal fusiliers were drawn up in front of the Garrison church, Wiesbaden, Germany, and ready to file in, when the camera clicked this echo of the Great war.

(Photograph from Wide World.)

AND NOW THE FAMILY PLANE—The private air bus of Col. E. A. Deeds, New York banker-flyer, at anchorage on his country estate at Dayton, O. The plane is in actual everyday use.

COLONEL, no less, is Miss Dorothy E. Stone, honorary commander of the cadet corps at Kansas university. Her full dress uniform bears the traditional jayhawker emblem of K. U.

(Photograph from Wide World.)

GREETING A WINGED MESSENGER—Natives of Port Moresby, New Guinea, turned out en masse, and, one might say, almost fully clothed, for a tribal celebration when their first airplane arrived from Australia. The machine, built in America, is a sister ship to Lindbergh's "The Spirit of St. Louis."