NEWSPAPERS in France and England do not print facts which those in power do not want revealed.

Newspapers in Germany, Italy and Russia print only what the dictators tell them to print.

While momentous events and forces shape the destiny of civilization, censorship and propaganda keep the bulk of the world's population in ignorance.

Chicago Tribune readers continue to get the facts.

With conditions everywhere making it increasingly difficult to get the truth, the distinctive performance of the Tribune foreign staff again makes plain that there is no substitute for competent news gatherers who write from the American viewpoint.

Despite censorships and the greatest propaganda machinery the world has ever known, their despatches are keeping Tribune readers informed of every significant move and countermove in Europe.

Alex Small's coverage of the recent Serbian-Croat negotiations provided almost daily scoops on this key problem of the Balkans.

Sigrid Schultz's despatches from Berlin have given the most comprehensive accounts of Germany's moves and aims published anywhere.

Edmond Taylor's reports on the transformation of France from peace to wartime footing have had no equal.

In London, David Darrah's presentation of all the conflicting forces shaping England's policy has offered the clearest picture of Britain's strategy to appear in print.

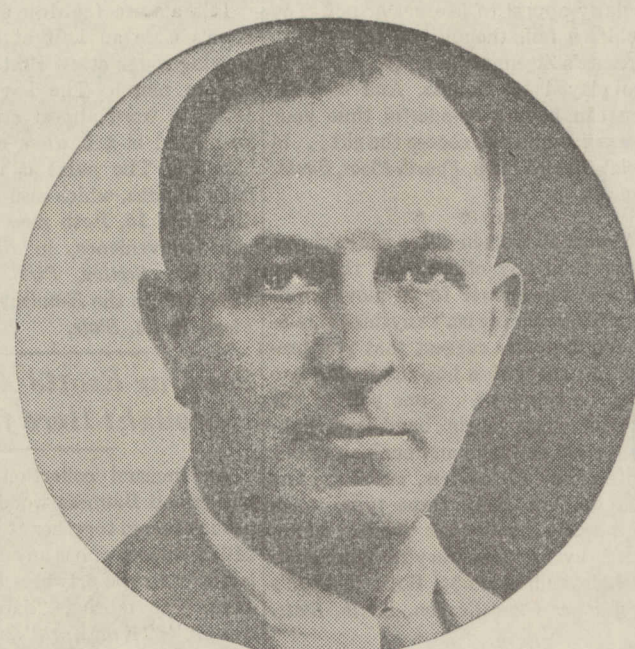

From Riga, Latvia, across the border from Russia, Donald Day has made understandable to all the reasons for Russia's attitude.

Sam Brewer's graphic accounts of post-war Spain have outlined in detail the tremendous problems facing the new regime.

Capt. M. M. Corpening's recent articles about each of the Central and South American countries gave readers new information about the effects of European affairs on Latin American republics. He is now in Mexico reporting the political and social developments in that country.

Tribune correspondents do not pass on to you the propaganda of the official press bureaus. American born and American trained, these aggressive reporters do their own fact finding. They spare no expense or effort in order to get first hand accounts of happenings and trends abroad.

To be fully informed about events abroad, to have the facts so as to know what to expect, read the Chicago Tribune.
